It eventually became known as Entertaining Comics, with such titles as Tales from the Crypt, Weird Science, and Mad, all of which showcased the work of talented artists, including Basil Wolverton, whose Lena the Hyena was used on a Mad cover.

Editorial

By Maggie Thompson

It occurred to me, as we began putting this issue together, that many — most? — of today's readers have little idea of why E.C. holds such a position of high regard among some collectors. These readers may not even have seen Russ Cochran's fine reprint periodical line or the magnificent boxed hardcover collections.

Even if you've heard of E.C., you may be under the impression that its main accomplishment came with Tales from the Crypt: that the E.C. logo designates story after story in which a malefactor gets a routine appropriate, if grisly, punishment.

While gross-out dismemberments may turn on today's audiences, it's not really what motivates those collectors who have devoted decades to the pursuit of completing E.C. collections. Return with me for a moment to those drab days of yesteryear: the early '50s. There's some debate as to exactly when The Golden Age of Comics ended. But I can tell you that by the early '50s there were few bright spots. Work of such comics greats as Walt Kelly were almost never to be seen on comics racks. Page counts had shrunk, leading even geniuses like Carl Barks to suffer from restricted story-telling. The Spirit (for those lucky few whose papers had carried that comics section) was ending. Educators sneered at comics to the point at which many parents denied them to their children.

But in the midst of it all, the E.C. comics line stood out as an increasingly vivid splash. Readers today may pick up a title and say, "Well, I don't think this issue of Weird Fantasy #21 is worth $300. The stories aren't that great." But the point at the time was that Weird Fantasy cost a dime, just like any other comic book. And for that dime readers got complete short stories with beginning, middle, and punch ending, compellingly told and beautifully drawn. And there were other E.C. titles, too. With the term "Marvel Zombies" decades in the future, many of us independently were (perhaps appropriately) "E.C. Zombies." That is, we bought anything with the E.C. logo as soon as we saw it.

And the art got better and better. When Artist #2 delivered his work to the office, the editor would deliberately gush over the work that had just been turned in by Artist #1 — and Artist #2 would grit his teeth and return to his studio to outdo the work of Artist #1.

When we went to look for back issues, the collecting world (and remember: comics collecting as a formal hobby was still an individual business back then, without price guides or weekly focal points) got confusing. As Don outlined in The Comic-Book Book:

The early Entertaining Comics line is a tangled web of shortlived titles that were turned into new titles without changing the numbering — the Post Office charges a large fee for new titles granted second-class mailing rights. One example should be sufficient: Moon Girl and the Prince became Moon Girl with the second issue, Moon Girl Fights Crime with the seventh, A Moon . . . A Girl . . . Romance with the ninth issue, and Weird Fantasy with the thirteenth — and then Weird Fantasy followed that numbering through #18, and followed that with #7 because the Post Office complained (understandably) that, despite the numbering, it was a new title. And that's not quite all. With issue #23, Weird Fantasy combined with Weird Science, which had had a similar spate of title-switching and had also achieved 22 issues under that title. The combined book was called Weird Science-Fantasy (which also was the title of an annual reprint collection from WS and WF) through issue #29, then the title was changed to Incredible Science-Fiction. The book died with issue #33 without again changing title.

Now, aren't you glad I let one example suffice?

But we — and our fellow collectors — tracked down issue after issue because it was worth it. E.C. created its own mini-Golden Age worth collecting.

Diamond gets Marvel

Diamond distribution of Marvel products starts Feb. 28

By Maggie Thompson

Marvel Entertainment Group President and COO David J. Schreff and Diamond Comic Distributors President and CEO Steve Geppi announced Feb. 7 that Marvel has signed a service agreement with Diamond to service specialty market retailers and direct-market comic-book shops.

Marvel Executive Vice President, Communications Sandra Padnos told CBG that Schreff said the "multi-year" agreement gives Diamond "exclusive distribution to the North American direct market."

On Dec. 28, 1994, Marvel, the largest publisher of comic books in America, announced purchase of New Jersey-based Heroes World Distribution Co. (then the No. 3 distributor) — and followed that by appointing Heroes World sole distributor of direct-market product as of July 1, 1995. Until now, comics shops have had to purchase comics from at least two distributors in order to carry a full line of product.

More recently, Heroes World duties were cut back and physical distribution was being handled by R.R. Donnelly. In autumn 1996, Marvel Vice President of Direct Market Sales Matt Ragone and his staff were relocated to New York City from the Heroes World offices. The transition begins immediately, and Heroes World offices were still in business Feb. 7 working on the transition which will be complete at the end of April. Padnos said the arrangement with R.R. Donnelly "is in the process of being terminated."

Distribution problems have continued to plague Marvel from the initial acquisition. Jan. 9, 1996, then-Marvel Entertainment Group President Gerard Calabrese told CBG, "I have no greater priority in the first six months of 1996 than getting our Heroes World distribution operation performing up to everyone's standard — no greater priority."

Following that, Marvel reviewed its procedures and the direct market itself. It said its announcement of having selected Diamond as its distributor, "follows a detailed six-month review of direct-market retail services that determined Diamond possesses the systems and technology to provide consistent, reliable distribution to Marvel customers. The move to Diamond expands Marvel's ability to support its line of products, while preserving the close customer contact essential to continued publishing growth.

Schreff said, "By teaming up with Diamond, Marvel will provide our retail customers with the best-selling comics, a reliable distribution system, and a discount and incentive plan designed to maximize customer profits. Ultimately, we're doing this to ensure that customers have a simple, practical method for purchasing Marvel products."

Geppi said, "Diamond's focus has always centered on the service of our customers. We welcome the opportunity to provide Marvel a solid platform for customer satisfaction and to assist Marvel customers during the transition."

Christian T. Petersen, CEO of the much smaller Downtown Distribution firm, told CBG, "I am encouraged to learn that Marvel has chosen the wise step in releasing its distribution, thus allowing retailers to receive this pivotal product line in a consistent, timely manner. Diamond Comic Distributors is the market leader, and I am sure that Steve Geppi and his experienced staff will put an end to the distribution problems of Marvel's product. This event will help to solidify our industry's infrastructure — a very positive thing."

Petersen added, however, that he hoped Marvel would eventually end the exclusivity of the arrangement. "I understand that Marvel may be concerned about selling to smaller distributors for financial reasons, though I am confident, speaking for Downtown Distribution, that our management team and investors can potentially find a mutually beneficial agreement with Marvel, thus allowing a broader availability of its product line."

Marvel's Padnos said, "The staff remaining in New Jersey will not be moved to New York; they're all being laid off. Everything in the New Jersey office will be closed down by the end of April."

She emphasized that the severance arrangements were "very generous," adding, "The workforce being laid off mostly consists of entry-level people or short-service individuals who have been with the company less than 18 months, mostly in accounting and customer service positions. They'll receive continuing benefits, out-placement service, and "stay bonuses" as an incentive to assist with the transition.

"Our aim here is to maximize customer service and efficiency."

Geppi said, "Diamond will always strive for perfect service. By adding Marvel Comics to our business, we look forward to improving the services we offer to retailers and suppliers alike."

He added in a note to suppliers, "It will enable Diamond to maintain and grow our sales volume and, therefore, to support and improve the level of services we offer suppliers and retailers alike. We do not anticipate that Marvel's return to Diamond will affect our relationships with any of our other suppliers."

A general announcement said, "Diamond is evaluating whether Marvel products will count towards Diamond's current discount plateaus and will announce a decision prior to the April (June-shipping) Previews due date.

Perspective

on the events in the news

What does this mean to comics buyers? Initially, those buying through subscription services will still select Marvel titles from a Marvel catalog and shouldn't notice any difference.

What does this mean for comics retailers? While any shock of added volume to the Diamond system might cause some nervous days, retailers will be able to consolidate orders and should save money short-term. Long-term, some may find the days of distributor competition more appealing.

What does this mean for comics publishers? Heroes World wasn't shipping others' product anyway. The addition of a huge vendor inevitably diffuses Diamond's attention to individual publishers, but as long as the Marvel catalog is separate, its titles won't distract much from those in Previews.

Has anything like this ever happened before? Multiple distributors are a phenomenon of the last 20 years. National owned the distributor system shipping Marvel titles in the 1960s, so should DC one day exercise some potential right to buy Diamond, it'd be déjà vu all over again.

Some details of the arrangements are as follows:

- Diamond will ship Marvel's products effective with material retailers receive Feb. 26.
- Marvel's current products are at the R.R. Donnelly warehouse and will be trucked to Diamond.
- May-shipping titles will be ordered through Diamond.
- Retailers will find copies of the Mega Marvel catalog bundled with Dia-

Gaiman will adapt screenplay for Warner Bros. 'Death' film

Chris Petrikin in Daily Variety for Feb. 6 wrote that Neil Gaiman is adapting his Vertigo graphic novel Death: The High Cost of Living for Warner Bros., which has optioned the project for a film scheduled to be produced by Jane Hamsher and Don Murphy and possibly directed by Gaiman. (Hamsher and Murphy are also producing the film based on Alan Moore's From Hell.) Petrikin described the story as concerning "a young girl who is convinced she is the incarnation of the Grim Reaper, who once every hundred years must spend 24 hours as a mortal so that she can learn the value of the lives she has to claim. The screenplay will evolve around the events of that day," adding that Gaiman's first novel was Nowhere, "the title of a recent BBC-TV drama he wrote." That title is actually Neverwhere, and Death: The High Cost of Living does not deal with a delusional adolescent. However, Gaiman told CBG, "The film is based solidly on the graphic novel but opens up in a number of directions, so there's a lot more cool stuff."

Sotheby's auctions movie posters

The largest single-owner collection of movie posters ever to come to auction will be offered at a Sotheby's auction scheduled for March 1. The auction will feature more than 375 posters from the Feiertag collection, dating from the 1910s to the 1970s. Among the highlights of the collection are images of such leading men and women as Mary Pickford, Marlene Dietrich, Douglas Fairbanks, Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire, and Humphrey Bogart; comics like Buster Keaton, the Marx Brothers, and Laurel and Hardy; cowboy stars like John Wayne and Buck Jones; and comics characters like Superman.

"Over the course of a 33-year collecting odyssey, Todd Feiertag has assembled one of the finest collections of movie posters in the world," said Dana Hawkes, director of Sotheby's Collectibles Department in New York. "Sotheby's is honored to host this sale, which features a strong offering of posters from the 1930s and 1940s, as well as many one-of-a-kind examples and posters never before offered at auction."

One of only two known copies of a one-sheet from Boris Karloff's The Mummy is valued at $80,000 to $100,000. A one-sheet from the silent short The Haunted House (1921) is believed to be the earliest known Buster Keaton one-sheet and is valued at $10,000 to$15,000. A Three Stooges one-sheet for A Ducking They Did Go is valued at $9-12,000.

Among the animation posters offered are a one-sheet of Porky Pig's first appearance on screen in Paramount's 1935 Merrie Melodies (valued at $7000 to $9000); a half-sheet from RKO's 1937 Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs (valued at $3000 to $5000); and a one-sheet from RKO's 1942 Mickey's Birthday Party (valued at $4000 to $6000).

Order increases for March will be accepted by Heroes World until 5 p.m. ET Feb. 12. Advance reorders for March merchandise may be placed with Heroes World until 5 p.m. ET Feb. 21.
- Beginning Feb. 24, all Heroes World advance orders and reorders must be placed with Diamond.
- Heroes World will distribute April's Mega Marvel, but orders are to be placed with Diamond.
- March and April Mega Marvel orders will be filled and invoiced under existing Heroes World discounts.
- In the June Mega Marvel, Marvel will publish its discount schedule, including its discount tiers, incentive platforms, and terms of sale.
- Delay in paying a Heroes World balance will affect a retailer's account with Diamond. Immediate questions may be discussed with a Diamond credit analyst at (800) 45-COMIC.
- Heroes World will close outstanding retailer issues by March 7, "including credits, shortages, damages, and payments, but excluding authorized returns."

Padnos emphasized that the choice of Diamond had nothing to do with Marvel's filing for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. "It was a result of the six-month review of the distribution set-up, a review which had began months before the bankruptcy. The new management was assessing company strengths and where we could benefit from improvement."

So does this represent a change in Marvel's philosophy of direct-market distribution? Schreff responded, "This reflects the renewed commitment of the new management team to ensure reliability and consistency to the customer."

Market Guide

Back issues:

Shay Seth, John Lee, Continental Comics, P.O. Box 54296, Philadelphia, PA 19105.

Continental Comics reported business is "good" and predicted, "1997 should be strong for specialized collecting."

Currently, Continental said it is experiencing "strong demand for many Golden Age titles," while "Silver is lukewarm."

In Golden Age, Continental reported its customers are looking for: Hitler covers; Matt Baker covers; gory, pre-Code horror titles; "Good Girl" covers; and high-grade Timelys and DCs.

In Silver Age, Continental said demand is focused on high-grade comic books, particularly 1950s DCs in Fine or better condition.

Cry for Dawn stands out as the popular modern title among Continental customers.

In Golden Age, Continental reports low or decreasing demand for Dells, most funny-animal titles, cowboy titles, and "some romance titles."

Average-grade, mid-run issues of most Silver Age titles are also hard to sell, Continental reported.

Original art:

Mitch Itkowitz, Graphic Collectibles, 22 Blue Hills Dr., Saugerties, NY 12477.

Among modern artists, Itkowitz reported, "Adam Hughes art is incredibly popular now."

In Silver Age, "Art by Joe Kubert, Murphy Anderson, Carmine Infantino, and Gil Kane is always in demand."

Demand for art by Jack Kirby and Steve Ditko "has quieted down, as there is a lot of work available by these two artists."

Itkowitz said he is forced to be selective in the art that he carries. "You have to go with the flow of the collectors."

Overall, Itkowitz said he is upbeat about the original-art field, having had several years of "fine" sales. "More people should collect original art."

Hitler covers are a hit with Continental customers.

Recent noteworthy Golden Age sales

An end-of-the-year report from Paul Dyroff includes sales of Superman #1 in Fair/Good condition for $10,500; Superman #14 in Fine for $2000; More Fun #63 with slight restoration of the spine in Very Fine/Near Mint for $2000; All American #61 with slight restoration of the spine in Very Fine/Near Mint for $1500; Crack #1 in Good/Very Good for $700; and a batch of Batmans from #5 to #11 for a total of $5000.

Continental Comics reported recent sales of Contact #12 in Very Good/Fine condition for $400; Batman #4 in Very Good for $300; and Superman #17 in Very Good for $300.

In Golden Age original art, Graphic Collectibles reported selling a Lou Fine Spirit page from 1945 for $1600 and a Joe Kubert Hawkman splash page from Brave and the Bold #35 for $11,000.

I was wondering if anyone else has seen the series Knife to the Heart, which has been running on PBS recently. It's a history of heart surgery and, as such, it has a very interesting credit.

The series producer (as well as writer, producer, and director of at least the first episode) is Tony Stark.

I can't wait until they get to the benefits of iron armor in heart surgery.

One of our readers was kind enough to inform me that Agony Acres #3 was listed as canceled in CBG's calendar, so I checked and, sure enough, there it was.

First, for those who might not know, Agony Acres is a murder mystery set against the backdrop of a virtual-reality gladatorial sport called "Agony," played in a giant stadium called Agony Acres. The story begins when the Agony runners (or athletes) start to die, not only in the virtual-reality race scenarios, but in real life, as well. That's when Homicide Detectives Jack Calhoun and Lucky Bishop are called in to solve the mystery of Agony Acres.

I know the delay in publishing may have caused some confusion for our readers and I apologize. Agony Acres #3 was originally scheduled to ship in October 1996, but we postponed it for several reasons, the two largest being Diamond's absorption of Capital City and the fact that we decided to expand the limited series from four to five issues.

Even though Agony Acres #4 was to be an expanded finale issue, there just asn't enough room to finish the story properly. We literally had to throw out everything we had finished for #4, with the expception of the cover beautifully inked by George Pérez, and start over. We felt the best place to schedule a delay in publishing was between the second and third issues.

Agony Acres #3 will be in black and white and was solicited in Diamond's January Previews for March release. #4 has been solicited in the upcoming March Previews for May release, and, Lord willing, Agony Acres #5 will be in stores in early July.

I would like to offer thanks to all the many helpful people and loyal readers who patiently stuck by us in our first year as a fledgling small-press publisher. And a special thanks to CBG and its staff for providing such a wonderful forum for all comics lovers.

Doug Wheeler

As both a comics fan who occasionally drags as much as a bag's worth of comics to conventions to get signed and as a comics professional who does table time signing comics as penance for the number of comics I've sometimes inflicted upon others, I'd like to give Mark Evanier's talk about the "inevitability" of professionals having to charge for autographs in order to control autograph sellers a hearty "boooo!"

I understand that a few — a scant few — of us attract lines like those Jesus got distributing free bread and fish. Those individuals have handled the situation by handing out tickets for signings and instituting limits on the number of items they'll sign. The vast majority of us, however, do not face such overwhelming crowds.

Charging $1 per autograph will not drive away autograph sellers, but it will drive away fans. Autograph sellers would simple consider it part of the expense of doing business and factor it into their prices, making the situation worse.

It is very simple to distinguish an autograph seller from a true fan — true fans do not bring duplicates of the same issue; autograph sellers do. Punish or reward as you see fit.

I am responding to the letter from Becky Hoff in CBG #1212. I wonder where she picked up the revisionist historical data that permeates her letter.

I first came into contact with both Russ Cochran and Bruce Hamilton in fandom circles in the late 1960s, while still in high school. I began my first mail-order ads for comics in 1966. I got to know both fellows quite well long before 1980. Twenty years ago, both gents were movers and shakers in our hobby who later decided to join forces, rather than compete on the same material and projects.

One of the biggest advertisers for all kinds of stuff back in the 1960s was Russ Cochran. Russ used to teach math and physics at Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, while at the same time dealing comics material out of his house.

Oh, So?

I was a two-hour drive away from Adel, Iowa, until I went to an electronics school in Des Moines for a short while right after high school. It was Russ who convinced me to attend college, which I did for a couple years.

I was impressed when Russ showed me his EC Fan Addict certificate with its #3 on it, acquired when the club first began in 1952, which served to specifically date his fanac. He was one of my mentors in this hobby and had a lot of cool comics collectibles. I used to try very hard to come up with material Russ might be interested in, since he always had so much I wanted.

When they first came out, I was one of many who bought his Frazetta, King Features, and EC portfolios wholesale to resell to other comic-book collectors. I also was the fifth person to sign up for his Frazetta Weird Science-Fantasy #29 Frazetta watercolor project, one of Russ's first fandom projects. Russ was even wholesaling his original auction venue, Graphic Gallery.

In retrospect, probably the most significant piece I ever came away with from Russ' house was the original Joe Shuster cover to the abortive 1933 Humor Publishing attempt to publish The Superman. This cover had sat in pieces behind one of Max Gaines' desk drawers, all crumpled up, for 20 years until Bill Gaines gave it to Russ. After I took it to the 1970 Seuling Comic Art Convention and people like Jerry DeFuccio told me it was most likely the third Superman drawing "ever" done, I soon thereafter published it as a twice-up poster to preserve it for posterity. CBG ran my article last year about this footnote in comics history.

Bruce Hamilton first called me up in late 1969, responding to an RBCC ad I ran. Hamilton said he used to write comic-book stories, some of which Steve Ditko had illustrated back in 1953 and 1954. We went through what I had, talking for a while about what comics fandom and collecting meant to each of us. We began a correspondence that lasted for quite some time.

Oh, So?

Early next year, Bruce talked me into making the trek out to the first comicon he was putting on in the Phoenix area. If memory serves me correctly, it was held on the university campus in the hope that college students might take up the hobby, as well as providing a serious setting for any possible news stories which might be generated. One night before the convention in Phoenix, Bruce talked me into coming out to the radio station where he and I talked comics live on the air. I would say that Bruce's media connections went far in raising the consciousness of comics as a viable hobby in this country, and he became another of my early mentors in this wonderful hobby.

In 1972, Bud Plant and I became roommates in San Jose. We opened up Comics & Comix, the first comic-book chain-store operation and, six months later, hosted the Berkeleycon in the Pauley Ballroom at the ASUC Building on the UC Berkeley campus, the first Comicon to center on creators' rights. I worked the store along with fellow partner John Barrett, while Bud busied himself getting his business degree from San Jose State, rarely venturing into the stores.

At the Berkeleycon, we acquired more than two-thirds of the fabled Tom Reilly collection. Also at this seminal show, Bruce showed up with an Action Comics #1 (June 1938) he had just acquired for a grand in southern California, and Theo Holstein of the Sacramento area kept badgering Bruce to sell it to him all during our Comicon. San Francisco Examiner newspaper accounts I reacquired from the San Francisco Public Library a few years ago mention Bruce as having turned down a witnessed $1500 offer from Theo. This very same SF Examiner article mentions me as the Comicon organizer. When the reporter asked me what my favorite comic-book story was, I replied, "the earthquake story with the Terrys and the Fermis from Uncle Scrooge #13 by Carl Barks."

A few weeks later, Bruce bought yet another copy of Action #1 somewhere, which became the copy he sold to Theo, which in turn went to teen-ager Mitch Mehdy for $1801.26. The newswire stories Bruce generated from that is still the stuff of legend in this field.

In the mid-1970s, long before 1980, Burle Rowe, Bruce Hamilton, and Russ Cochran set up their megastore, Camelot, in Houston, Texas, initially pooling their resources. It was way ahead of its time, put together by a lawyer, a math professor, and a disc jockey. At that same time, when we hosted the Berkeleycon, Professor Don Ault had been teaching a popular upper-division, semester-long five-unit English course on Barks and the mythology in Donald and Uncle Scrooge stories as fine literature. I was told then that there was a waiting list at times to get into the course. The Berkeleycon 1973 program book contained an article on Carl Barks by Ault. It began, "The mushrooming fame, popularity and value of the comics and comic art of Carl Barks came as a surprise to no one, perhaps, more than Carl Barks himself. Barks' seclusion as a comic artist is almost legendary ..."

The article also contained cartoons by Barks from 1933-34. As far as I know, this was the first time any of the Calgary Eye Opener cartoons were reprinted for Barks' growing legions of fans. They were risque for the times in which they were originally printed and seemed humorously tame when compared to the (then-current) comix like Zap, Freak Brothers, Bijou, Slow Death, etc.

Through the 1970s, Donald Duck #9 was one of "the" comics you had to acquire if you were into the prestige aspects of collecting comic books. It was up there in stature alongside Action #1, Detective #27, etc.

Barks comics were some of the easiest to sell and highest-demand comics in the entire hobby for years, long before 1980. This already-high demand is what led to the talks for Another Rainbow and Gladstone to come into being, especially after Whitman gave up its contract, and, for the first time in 40 years, there were no readily available Barks comics on the newsstands. When Barks retired, Whitman immediately launched into reprinting many of his classic renditions of our favorite ducks.

Ault and Hamilton talked at the Berkeleycon in 1973. Many of us lamented then that the Calgary Eye Opener illustrations were so rare and wouldn't it be nice if one day they could all be collected. I applaud the concept that this is finally occurring after all these years. You can't find these, even if you have the money to spend on them.

It is common knowledge that Bruce bought many Barks paintings, sometimes prepaying a percentage before they were actually completed. I would say Bruce and Russ separately, then together, made Barks a lot of money for many years. It would be a farfetched concept for Becky Hoff to suggest, "Cochran generously shared his relationship with Barks, and Hamilton's successful Barks marketing was the result of his advantageous relationship with Cochran." This erroneous notion is simply silly.

Hamilton's involvement in the comics field stretches almost 30 years further back than her letter implies. As much as I like and admire Russ, Bruce would have succeeded in this field with or without the former's "advantageous" relationships with anybody. I witnessed Bruce for years making hundreds of "advantageous" business relationship all by himself.

I distinctly remember an article in Smithsonian Magazine in the 1970s that did more to put Carl Barks on the map of general public consciousness than did The Life and Times of Scrooge McDuck, though one may date the true original of this Nile River to your own Comic Art #7 which is where I learned the name Carl Barks.

Hoff also neglected to point out the Barks book of Duck paintings which came out around the same time. It was a concerted effort to talk the many painting owners into letting the rest of us see them in this wonderful book. I remember Bruce telling me the award it won for its exquisite binding and printing. I sold both in my stores. The book of paintings sold much better for most comics sellers I knew back then. Life and Times was blasted in the fan press at the time for changing Barks' (as in Garé's) beautiful original coloring.

Hoff also failed to mention that Whitman also put out several perfect-bound reprint "Best of" books, which sold many thousands. Even Last Gasp carried those Whitmans for many years, such was the demand for Barks art.

When Carl Barks was first honored at the San Diego Comicon back in 1977, wasn't it Bruce Hamilton who MC'd the intro?

It is obvious that Becky Hoff should have asked old-timers who were around back then before writing what she did.

This week my thoughts turn to the highly anticipated arrival of the new Ka-Zar series from Marvel Comics. The early art rushes from Andy Kubert have the Savage Land looking real nice. One knows that Mark Waid's story will compliment Kubert's style of storytelling. Waid's quality writing resume speaks for itself.

Although his stint on X-Men was brief, I didn't think he had the chance to express himself with the group situation. Waid's stories in which he has one main character to support with a small supporting cast are better. His work on Captain America, Flash, and Impulse illustrate this. Kingdom Come is in a class by itself. Let's hope he has a nice run with this comic book.

Now for something totally out of left field: I have a thought. As someone who dabbles in the show circuit as a dealer occasionally, I have unique experiences with fans mispronouncing characters' names.

There's this guy from the X-Men called Arch Angel, a samurai woman called Shy, and a ghost from DC called Spectree.

Jim Shooter was always good at weaving in a phonetic pronunciation of a tricky name. My thought is having a name glossary box on the letters page on occasion. Or perhaps a fan publication would put one together, a lofty task, indeed. But when you have guys running around like Mag-net-o, Low-gann (I mean how can you screw up Logan?), and Kay-Zar, I think it's a good idea.

Re: Mark Evanier's Point of View column about candy stores in issue #1212.

The candy stores in Brooklyn that sold comics fell into one of two categories: wet or dry. These are terms used in the candy-fountain-stationery-newsstand retail trade. A wet store had a soda fountain and counter with stools. A dry store lacked these amenities. Both typically sold newspapers, magazines, greeting cards, toys, stationery, and tobacco products. Whether wet or dry, they all sold packaged candy — thus the name "candy store."

Most of them (especially those built before the 1960s) featured signage given to them by either Breyer's Ice Cream or Coca-Cola. These signs wrapped around the front of the shops above the front door and windows and frequently also from floor to waist level. The signs would prominently feature pictures of Breyer's Ice Cream or Coca-Cola glasses. The signs would also announce the merchandise sold within: newspapers, greeting cards, and always candy. The name of the store never appeared on these signs, but the stores were so similar in style and stock that what stuck was the word "Candy" above the door.

However, in all my years in Brooklyn and in all my travels around that borough to find that elusive comic book I missed or to determine which candy store received comics earlier than others, I never found one that permitted patrons to sample comics (or any other reading matter) while eating at a table or counter. It wasn't until the 1990s and the advent of Borders Books that customers were encouraged to read unpurchased publications while eating.

Thus, Brooklyn can readily lay claim to that

I was bemused and delighted to see Peter David's recent But I Digress column revisit the "breast controversy" which my wife, Janette Gerdes, initiated in her long-ago letter regarding Catwoman's, er, pulchritude.

I am in comity with David so often that it's almost a pleasure to disagree with him on any issue. Sorry, Peter, but no name-calling or ad hominem attacks here, only civil and hopefully amusing debate.

When you discuss how the exaggeration of certain traits, in this case women's breasts, is a convention of comics (not to be confused with a comics convention, where I'll leave the subject of breasts untouched, so to speak), I agree. However, you note yourself that in men's cases, the musculature is emphasized, while the men are nearly emasculated (rather like tossing out the "package" category on MTV's Singled Out (not that we'd admit to watching, of course).

You rightly and amusingly make the point that this is less flattering to men than women. We are neuter; they, however egregiously, are sexual. But allow me to spin that a bit. In fact, your analogy is nonlinear, because what we need to be comparing are the sexual characteristics of men and women, or at least their secondary sexual characteristics. Because, you see, the subtextual message in comparing women's breasts and men's muscles is — and I know it was unintentional on David's part, given his body of work (so to speak) — that we value men for strength and women for sex — or for the reproductive functions of motherhood.

I'd say that is unprogressive, those traits being a fair part of, but in no way the sole or requisite functions of, womanhood.

To be direct — the fair comparison would be between the size of the bulge in a super-hero's crotch and the breast size of the super-heroine. And that is not what comics do, at least not those to which Janette originally objected.

That said, I loved your puns, Peter. Keep in mind, we don't dislike breasts, sex, or humor thereon. We simply strive to make comics (and the world its ownself, as Dan Jenkins might say) more equal in its approach to the genders.

I hope this has helped raise the discussion again (not a reference to Victoria or her secrets, Peter, pun all you might) soberly, which is to say, not in my cups, er, that is, in support of — no, that won't do. Let me not milk these cheap jokes — wait. Strike that. Rather, let us at least agree to uphold our two points — oh, dear, no.

In an unrelated incident, since both Maggie and Peter tend to enjoy infamous typos, I made two, one trying to apologize for the first, in an apa years ago. I was attempting to compliment a friend's love of travel and applied to her the term "wanderslut" in lieu of "wanderlust." Needless to say, I was dismayed, and, under the rubric of making it worse by apologizing, I typed that it must have anyway been a poor "metahor" (sound it out) instead of "metaphor." I honestly did not do either of these intentionally. Hope the remembrance brought a smile.

Take care. Take chances.

This past month marked the end of the line for Malibu Comics and its characters in the Ultraverse. The last issues of Prime and Ultraforce made their way into the stores, and no one knows if we will ever see these characters again. It's become an all-too-common event that I hear about these days, with comic-book companies closing up shop and their characters heading off into limbo. Blame it on declining sales and Marvel's inability to save Malibu from sinking into a deep hole.

Two years ago, when Marvel bought Malibu Comics, there were these great promises made that the two companies would take the industry into the next century and their heroes would be the best in comics. Well, so much for that! It was just another giant publicity campaign that went nowhere but down. Today, looking at what happened, I can't say that I'm surprised things didn't work out for the better. It was done at a time when sales were already declining and Marvel should have paid more attention to keeping its own comic-book publishing updated with the reality of a smaller market. Buying another company at the time was like eating an expensive meal in the dining room of a sinking ship.

In the long run, not much came out of the Marvel-Malibu merger. It did not lead to the publishing of better comics. Still, there was one bright spot. The Ultraforce/Avengers crossover was good. It came from the brilliant mind of George Pérez, but that's it. Today, Malibu Comics is out of the game, and Marvel is having so many problems that I don't know if the company will ever make a full recovery.

First, thanks for recommending Mutts. It's on my Christmas list.

In response to your response to Bruce Brocka's letter in CBG #1200, I agree with you and whoever suggested "Diamond Age." It's perfect.

Babylon 5 fans might want to know that there are at least two more books than David M. Harsziak mentioned; these are non-fiction. One is called Creating Babylon 5, and the other is Babylon 5 A-Z. Unfortunately, I don't have the authors' names handy. These books are imports from England, and a good specialty shop should be able to order them for you. I don't know about the second book, but I've read the first and found it informative. I'm hoping that Paul Cornell, Martin Day, and Keith Topping, the authors of what I consider the definitive reference book for Doctor Who — The Discontinuity Guide — will write a similar book on Babylon 5 when it finishes its five-year story arc.

As an aside to Michael E. Krupp — I always thought that new Coke thing was a scam.

Another thing. I want to write about my favorite new TV series (though I should note that I am assistant manager nights at a used book store, so there may be other good series I'm not seeing): Sabrina the Teenage Witch. I was surprised, but the series has fun guest stars. (How can you put down a show that has Debbie Harry and Penn and Teller as a witches' council?), an attractive cast (Caroline Rea, one of Sabrina's aunts, is gorgeous. Hey — if Jo Duffy can measure Sentinel's "hunk factor" —), and a couple of heavyweights on the writing staff (Frank Conniff and comic Nick Bakay). Not to let the show off too easily, the plots do sometimes creak a bit, but only one show so far hasn't had at least a couple of clever lines, usually spoken by Salem, the family's talking cat (voiced to great and witty effect by Bakay), my favorite character. Actually, he is a former witch sentenced to spend 100 years as a cat and for what? "Like any young kid," he says, "I craved world domination. They really crack down on you when you act on that. Now, the sound of the can opener is the only joy I get."

A sympathetic Sabrina asks, "Would you like your rubber mouse?"

"Please."

The show airs Friday at 9 p.m. ET on ABC. You should check a couple episodes to see whether you like it.

I liked young, zingy, with-it Mark Evanier's "mini-series" on Stan Lee. It reminded me of how I'm looking forward to his biography of Jack Kirby and made me want to suggest to Lee that he start his own autobiography. I have the perfect title: With Great Power Comes Great Responsibility. I'd love to hear how he regards his writing, his reputation, and the state of comic books today. Oh — and I liked the photo of Mark that ran in #1200 better than the usual one.

Finally, a semi-personal question, Maggie. Are you any relation to the Steve Thompson who wrote a Pogo price guide about 16 years ago? My used book store has a handful of Pogo books, and we use it for reference.

[My son is Stephen Thompson and he loves Pogo and other wonderful Walt Kelly creations, but he's the entertainment editor of The Onion, not the proprietor of Spring Hollow Books. The Spring Hollow Steve Thompson is a delightful person, the originator of the Pogo price guide, and the editor of The Fort Mudge Most, which I repeatedly recommend in Comics Guide. That Steve Thompson has done more to unearth classic Kelly than anyone else, I think, and all Kelly fans (a) owe him a debt and (b) should subscribe to the magazine, which reprints really choice material. Curious readers can send him a self-addressed, stamped envelope and request more information: The Pogo Fan Club, Spring Hollow Books, 6908 Wentworth Ave. So., Richfield, MN 55423. He also has had a fascinating booth at recent Chicago cons, because he stocks weird comics-associated stuff besides comic books. But wait till after I go through his stock at the next show, OK? I keep missing out on neat things because others get there first.]

They seem to have gone the way of the snail-darter or the passenger pigeon. If there are any left anywhere, we oughta slap a big "endangered species" label on them and do everything possible to forestall their extinction. It would be nice if succeeding generations of kids could see one, other than in old tapes of older kinescopes.

I am writing, this week, of kid-show hosts — a breed that could be found on local TV stations throughout the '50s and well into the '60s. In Los Angeles, they became scarce in the '70s and nonexistent in the '80s. Today, watching TV in Los Angeles, you stand a better chance of seeing actual, live footage of the Abominable Snowman than you do of finding a Sheriff John or an Engineer Bill. They were two of the superstars of my childhood, along with Skipper Frank, Tom Hatten, Chucko, Walker Edmiston and a few others.

And, of course, we had our local Bozo the Clown. Almost every city had a Bozo. It was some sort of franchise deal, akin to McDonald's. TV stations across the country paid a man named Larry Harmon for the right to slap Bozo make-up on a local actor, and I suppose they also purchased Bozo suits and Bozo props and Bozo scripts and Bozo cartoons and Bozo birdbaths and such. Romper Room and Ding Dong School operated on much the same basis.

The Los Angeles Bozo was an actor named Vance Colvig. Vance was a second-generation Bozo. His father, Pinto Colvig, had been one of the great cartoon voice actors, speaking for Goofy and countless lesser characters, often writing as well as voicing. In the '40s, when Capitol Records produced some superb albums for children, many of them featured or were presented by Pinto, who first performed the role of Bozo the Clown.

Vance did voices, too. He was Chopper the Bulldog in the Yakky Doodle cartoons on The Yogi Bear Show, and I knew that. I also knew that Yakky's duck voice was provided by Jimmy Weldon, who hosted Cartooneroony on another station and who did the same quacks for his puppet, Webster Webfoot.

So what you had was Vance Colvig being Bozo on Channel 5, Jimmy Weldon speaking for Webster Webfoot on Channel 13, and the two men voicing Yakky Doodle and Chopper on Channel 11. I didn't know what any of this meant when I was 8, but I knew it was vitally important. (Vance Colvig also worked often in front of the cameras, as well. Shortly before he passed away, he had a showy role as a wino in the Weird Al Yankovic movie UHF.)

When I was a kid, though, I assumed the Los Angeles Bozo was the one-and-only. Then, on a trip to San Diego, I tuned in the Bozo show there and discovered an impostor in the Bozo suit! I almost rushed to the phone, called the police, and alerted them that some dastardly villain had clown-napped the real Bozo and assumed his identity. (I feel the same way these days when I watch Letterman.)

That was how possessive we could get about our kid-show hosts. As a youth, your day could be a rough one: You could get creamed playing Candy Land. You could eat 12 of some girl's cookies before discovering they were fresh from her Play-Doh Fun Factory. You could find that your Colorforms had lost their cling. You could hide for hide-'n'-seek and, hours later, discover that no one had bothered to seek you. You could get off the Jungle Gym with half the sandbox in your Keds. You could even skin your knee. (I skinned mine every hour on the hour. It's a medical miracle that I even have a kneecap today.) All these disasters and more could befall you —

But at the proper time, your TV friends were there with cartoons for you. It wasn't so much that they were entertaining, as that they were there.

Moreover — and this was key — there were no surprises. Every one of these guys did the same routines and the same jokes and showed the same cartoons, over and over and over. That was part of their appeal. When you're a kid, you live in a world filled with things you don't understand. You're constantly reminded just how much you don't know. Not so with a good kids' show. When I turned on Sheriff John, for an hour, it was my world, and I understood everything in it. Because I'd seen it all, over and over and over.

My favorite kid-show host was — well, I had several. One was a wickedly witty puppeteer named Walker Edmiston, who popped up on most of the local stations at one time or another. He had a stock company of puppets including Kingsley the Lion, Callie the Cat, and a wonderful Shakespearean bird named R. Crag Ravenswood, who sounded not unlike Hans Conried. Working pretty much on his own, Edmiston would ad-lib an entire half-hour storyline every day. Very similar to the subsequent Muppet Show in setting and feel (backstage antics at an old theater), it was an uncommonly hip and funny series, and I never missed an episode.

Walker has since been a prolific actor, both on camera and doing voice work. He was in the cast when I wrote a series for Sid and Marty Krofft, and, when we were introduced, I insisted on reciting about 90 jokes from his old show and singing its theme song for him. I gather I was not the first adult to subject him to this, maybe not even the first that day.

Another fave was Tom Hatten, a local actor who donned a T-shirt and a sailor's cap and hosted the Popeye cartoons on KTLA, Channel 5. Tom was a cartoonist and, amid all the spinach-eating and fisticuffs, he'd demonstrate little drawing tips on an easel. They were so clever, and he made it look so easy, that you simply had to grab up a pencil and pad and try to replicate them. As a result, I could draw a semi-decent Popeye by age 8. (Sad to say, my drawing has not much improved since then.)

I also liked Engineer Bill over on KHJ, Channel 9, though not because of his cartoons. If there was a bargain basement for animated films, that must have been where Engineer Bill shopped, because he had the worst — things that couldn't even keep me entertained at that age. He had Spunky and Tadpole, Q.T. Hush, Colonel Bleep, The Funny Company — stuff like that. Today, my generation waxes nostalgic for almost anything that was on TV when we were young, but you don't see crowds swarming the video shops demanding The Complete Colonel Bleep letterboxed and on laserdisc, do you? I rest my case.

What Engineer Bill did have was a nifty game that he played every day called "Red Light-Green Light." He'd tell you to get a glass of milk and then, after a break for a mere 92 commercials, he'd play this game.

They'd flash a little crossing guard picture that said "green light" (this was before color TV) and the announcer would yell, "Green light," and we'd all start drinking our milk. Then suddenly, it would change to "red light" and we'd all stop. Then it would turn to "green light" again, and we'd resume drinking. They'd go back and forth, occasionally tossing in a "yellow light," just to be cute. The object of the game was not to get caught drinking milk on a red light. When they called "red light," you had to cease, even if it meant choking or passing a mouthful of milk through your nose. I sometimes sprayed the entire TV set in the process.

It was a fun game, but I finally decided it was a bit unnecessary. If Engineer Bill wanted to make his viewers spit up, he could have just shown more Spunky and Tadpole.

As I said, he had the worst cartoons. Over on Channel 7, Chucko the Birthday Clown ran old Terrytoons and the output of the Charles Mintz animation studio — things like Krazy Kat and Scrappy. Jimmy Weldon on Channel 13 had Felix the Cat and the MGM cartoons. On Channel 11, Sheriff John showed early Warner cartoons and what I now know were cartoons from the Van Buren studio of the 1930s (the human Tom and Jerry, not to be confused with the cat-and-mouse version in the MGM package.) Later, the good sheriff offered episodes of Clutch Cargo and Space Angel, which I didn't much like but which were so weird, you just had to watch them.

The class act of Los Angeles kid-show hosts was, for me, Skipper Frank over on Channel 5. He had a wonderful, albeit limited, package of Warner Brothers cartoons which he recycled endlessly. One Bugs Bunny epic — Hare Remover — was practically a daily feature.

I have several happy memories of Skipper Frank — and one traumatic one. The Skipper was no ventriloquist, but he made a valiant effort with a dummy named Ziggy. Once or twice a show, he'd haul out Ziggy and converse with the little wooden guy, the Skipper's lips moving like Mick Jagger doing an impression of Martha Raye. Then, one weekend, he made an appearance at a supermarket opening, and someone stole Ziggy out of his car.

Monday, on the show, with the seriousness of a parent asking kidnappers for his baby's safe return, Skipper Frank broadcast a public appeal. It was the saddest thing I ever saw on television. On Tuesday, he again pleaded with whoever had Ziggy to bring him back, and this continued for several days. He never did find him, apparently. A week or two later, Skipper Frank had a new

The bloom on the Rose

Pat Brady's comic strip Rose Is Rose does not appear in every metropolitan newspaper, so you may not be familiar with it. And that's too bad: The strip is absolutely gorgeous — art and technique.

But not to worry: Now we have the means to remedy this yawning gap in your acquaintance with excellence in comic-strip artistry.

Andrews and McMeel has published a collection of the strip called She's a Momma, Not a Movie Star. Sundays as well as dailies, albeit all in black and white. Merely $9.95. You couldn't spend 10 bucks better.

Brady is a marvelously inventive, funny, and warmly caring cartoonist. I concluded that from the evidence of the strips alone. I also spent a couple hours with him this fall, and — yup, that's the way he is.

The strip is about a mother and housewife, Rose, her husband, Jimbo, and their son, Pasquale, who is a preschooler. It is, in other words, a "family strip." But it is so much more than that. First, it is also a continuous experiment in cartooning. Brady varies perspective and angle and every other aspect of graphic art to give us, every day, a fresh look at his creation. In short, he uses the visual resources of the medium to great comic effect. This is not an exercise in verbal humor: Word and picture blend adroitly to achieve Brady's purposes.

When Rose visits her mother and eats her mother's cookies, the pictures show her as a small child again. When she's feeling protective of her son, Brady depicts her as a mother bear (Pasquale as a cub). Rose has an adventurous side, too — and, when indulging it, she may appear as a biker bimbo in leather jacket and boots.

Brady has solved the problem of the throw-away panels in the Sunday strip with visual ingenuity. The throw-away panels in Rose are the first two, in which the second panel is a continuation of the scene in the first panel — but with a narrative purpose: The continued scene in the second panel "explains" the scene we see in the first. It's like a visual puzzle: The first panel is the puzzle; the second, the solution or explanation. And when we see the explanation, we smile. That's the joke.

Many of Brady's daily strips work like that, too. The punchline is the explanation of the pictures we've seen him parade before us for the first couple panels.

But clever visuals are not all that Brady gives us. Rose and Jimbo love each other and Pasquale; and he, them. No other family strip I know of spends any great amount of time making this fact of domestic life so evident. But Brady does it — and without being cloyingly sweet. There is a matter-of-fact-ness about the love in this family. Love is a fact of daily life here. Rose and Jimbo occasionally quarrel, too. But they always make up. Lovingly.

Rose is a marvelously fresh breath of air. And for a cartoonist wishing to see the resources of the medium expertly deployed, reading Rose is like imbibing a fine wine. It is a heady experience that you'll want to repeat again and again.

More weekend wonders

As mentioned in an earlier column, it is my quaint custom to spend Saturday mornings lounging in my favorite chair and reading the week's take of funnybooks. Recently, these included:

• I missed Sam Norkin: Drawings and Stories when it came out in 1994 in paperback from Heinemann (at $29.95) but made up for lost time as soon as I heard of its existence.

Al Hirschfeld is the all-time champion theatrical caricaturist in this country — perhaps in the known universe. But if Hirschfeld is king, Norkin is the unquestioned crown prince. His work has appeared weekly in such newspapers as The New York Daily News and The Boston Globe since the mid-1950s. Norkin's style — graceful brush lines and starkly spotted blacks — echoes Hirschfeld in the uncluttered clarity of presentation and in the sometimes geometric abstraction of his caricatures.

But Norkin's work is habitually more angular than Hirschfeld's and slightly less purely decorative. In short, it's solid work that stands on its own merits. It is worth studying and savoring, and, with this book's publication, we now have the opportunity to do both. This collection has the added attraction of ample annotation from Norkin. Many of the drawings are accompanied by stories of the events surrounding the production the drawing captures — stories of the theater and actors and directors. Great evening's reading.

• Betty by the Hour is not for children. It's for adults — and not just because it's about a lady who earns her living by the hour on her back. It takes an adult sensibility to appreciate the humor in the comedic sexual escapades of a hooker like Betty. The two-page episodes collected in this series of comics from Eros are written by Trillo and Maicas and illustrated by the redoubtable Jordi Bernet, who brought us 36 volumes of The Torpedo in the 1980s.

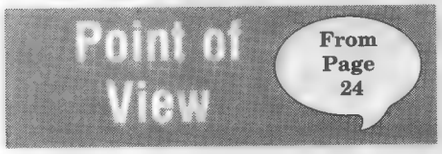
Here, Bernet's renderings are unembellished with Caniffesque brushed-in shadows. Instead, he works with simple line drawings, black solids, and some cross-hatching. The characters are all big-foot cartoony interpretations (even Betty herself, except it's not her feet that are big). As for the tales themselves, they are not merely sex stories. They have (dare I say it?) moral weight, too. Evil (as in such vices as greed and cruelty) is punished; good (as in simple joy in animal pleasure and pride in parenthood — yes, Betty is a mother) is rewarded and celebrated. Mostly, there is hilarity and joyfulness — the kind that comes from frank admission of sexual appetites and candid indulgence of same.



dummy and we heard no more about the AWOL Ziggy.

One of the reasons it was so chilling was that Skipper Frank had a wonderful way of talking to (not down to) children. He wasn't as funny as some of the other hosts and he couldn't draw like Tom Hatten. Still, he had a way of looking into the camera and speaking directly to each and every viewer, not as adult-to-kid but just as one person talking to another. Occasionally, when there was a big item in the news, he would explain it in terms that made it fascinating and utterly comprehensible to someone under the age of 10. Would that all parents could talk to their kids as well as Skipper Frank addressed his audience.

That ability to communicate with youngsters was what made a kid-show host great — and what ultimately led to their near-total abolition. As with most everything that happens in television, the reasons were financial.

Kid-show hosts used to do commercials. Skipper Frank would talk to puppets and play games and introduce the same Bugs Bunny cartoon over and over, but he would also sell Sonny Boy soft-drink mix. In fact, I remember the ads just as vividly as the "entertainment" portions, for they were all part of one seamless hour to me then. He hawked Bosco, Oscar Mayer luncheon meats, Popsicles, and dozens of other products, like Fizzies tablets.

Fizzies tablets, when dropped into a glass of water, would fizz like Alka-Seltzer, turning the H_2O into a very bad carbonated soft drink. (We didn't care what it tasted like, of course; it was just fun to make. By the way, I recently saw Fizzies tablets in a K-Mart, so they either still make them, or they've been in that shop a lonnnnng time.)

And Engineer Bill sold Flav-r Straws, which were another great way, like Bosco or Quik, to turn your milk brown. A Flav-r Straw — and I don't think they make them now — was a drinking straw with a chocolate filament inside it. When you dipped the straw repeatedly in milk, it sort of flavored the milk. Or you could just suck your milk through the straw where, by passing over the filament, it turned vaguely chocolate. Again, it was more fun than tasty.

The greatest invention, as far as I was concerned, was the Fizz-Nik, and I still have one of these somewhere. A Fizz-Nik was a hollow plastic ball with nozzles on both sides. You put a scoop of vanilla ice cream inside the Fizz-Nik, then you wedged one nozzle into the mouth of a bottle of root beer or other carbonated beverage. By drinking the soda through the other nozzle, the liquid would flow over the ice cream before reaching your mouth, making the equivalent of a root-beer float. Someone actually invented the Fizz-Nik. If he didn't make as much cash off this as Bill Gates did off Microsoft Windows, there's no justice in the world.

The hosts of my youth sold all that stuff and more. But in the '60s, parents' groups got to complaining about content and commercials being blurred together. It seemed to give the sponsors an unfair advantage. The Federal Communications Commission finally decreed that a dividing line had to be drawn; entertainment and advertising could not be mingled on kids' shows; if Sheriff John was the program, he couldn't be part of the commercial.

(My pal Judy Strangis was a spokesperson for Mattel Toys in the '70s. She was in all the Barbie ads. Then she landed the role of Dynagirl in a Krofft kids' show called ElectraWoman and Dynagirl, and Mattel dropped her. If she was in the commercials, they couldn't be aired during that show.)

This ruling came about at a time when dozens of cartoon shows were being made available for syndication. These shows didn't require hosts, and it was a lot cheaper to run them than to hire a whole crew to produce a show every day. With the hosts prohibited from selling Kool-Aid, there was simply no reason to incur that expense.

There was a certain wisdom to the FCC action. I bought so much junk food because of Skipper Frank, it's a wonder I even have teeth today. Still, he offered nourishment of another kind.

Children today, when they turn on their TVs, get a pretty good dosage of cartoon characters, ninjas, robots, power rangers, dinosaurs (lovable and otherwise), monsters, and puppets. I have nothing against any of those creatures.

Still, it would be nice (and a novelty) if kids could spend an occasional moment with a human being. Just in case they ever encounter one in their later lives.

And that address, which I haven't mentioned since the last time, is Mark Evanier, 363 S. Fairfax Ave., #303, Los Angeles, CA 90036. Don't bother writing to ask if I want to sell my Fizz-Nik. Some things are too precious to part with at any price.

Orrin C. Evans and the story of 'All Negro Comics'

By Tom Christopher

When Orrin C. Evans died in 1971 at the age of 68, he was eulogized in the New York Times as "the dean of black reporters." From our vantage point a quarter of a century later, we can also say he was the father of black-oriented comic books.

Evans was born in 1902 in Steeleton, Pa., the eldest son of George J. Evans Sr., and Maude Wilson Evans. Evans Sr. was employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad, his wife was the first black graduate of the Williamsport Teachers' College, and the family lived in white neighborhoods. However, despite this stable home life, the everyday realities of Northern racism were never far from their door. Evans Sr. passed for white in order to provide a better living for his family than allowed by the menial jobs available to blacks, but this forced him to carry the pretense to the point of hiding the darker-skinned Orrin in a back room, while Maude donned an apron and pretended to be a maid when friends from his work dropped by. On other occasions, his father was not able to acknowledge his son at his workplace.

Years later, the younger Evans was visibly moved when relating these episodes. As Orrin Evans' friend Claude Lewis wrote in 1971, "There was no National Association for the Advancement of Colored People back then; there was no Urban League. Like others of his time, Orrin Evans was out there on his own. And what he had to suffer was more than anyone I know could endure."

Evans was a strong-willed young man, and, during the family's many dinner-table discussions on the issues of the day, he so often used the phrase "Don't tell me" in defending his beliefs that his father took to calling him "Mister Don't Tell Me," and, as often as his father would drive him to school and wait in the parking lot till he got in the door, just as often would he exit through the rear. Despite the emphasis placed on education in his family, Evans was more interested in the experiences life offered, and he dropped out of school in the eighth grade to pursue his goal of writing.

His first job was on Sportsman's Magazine at age 17, and his first real newspaper experience was with the Philadelphia Tribune, the oldest black paper in the country. From there, in the early 1930s, he decided to break the color barrier and landed a writing position on the Philadelphia Record, becoming the first black writer to cover general assignments for a mainstream white newspaper in the United States. In 1944, at the Record, he wrote a series of articles about segregation in the armed services, which were read into the Congressional Record and helped end the practice. He won an honorable mention in that year's Haywood Hale Broun award but also drew some unwelcome attention. To criticize the government during wartime, even to point out obvious hypocrisy, was considered treasonous by some, and he and his family received death threats. His daughter Hope remembers their house being protected in a 24-hour-a day vigil by a congregation of Evans' friends, both black and white, until the threats subsided.

Orrin C. Evans

This was not the only time Evans was threatened because of his color and position. Once, at the Philadelphia Police Precinct at 55th and Pine, a police sergeant pulled a revolver and ordered him out of the station, not believing a black man had any legitimate place on the front side of the bars, and national hero and Nazi-sympathizer Charles Lindbergh once held up a press conference during the infamous kidnapping of his son to have Evans ousted because he was black.

Shortly after the war, the Record was hit by a strike, and management decided to shut the paper down rather than settle the labor issues. Evans was out of a job and looking for something to do. He had always loved cartoons. Hope, a teacher like her grandmother, mother, and aunt, remembers her father reading the comics to her and particularly enjoying The Katzenjammer Kids and Li'l Abner. At work, he liked to walk through the art department and watch the staff cartoonists work. In later life, he enjoyed the civil rights cartoons of his friend Jerry Doyle and went out of his way to meet Morrie Turner, the first syndicated black cartoonist. He was impressed with the way a well-executed cartoon could simplify and clarify complex issues and, noting the high illiteracy rate in the black community, began to consider the possibility that he could reach a wider audience with a comic book than through his other writings, which by 1947 had expanded to include work in the Chicago Defender, Philadelphia Independent, Public Journal, American Musician, and Crisis, the NAACP journal.

For Evans to note the lack of black heroes in popular culture was a singular feat in itself. As Lewis told me in a recent interview, "We weren't very conscious about being left out; it was just the way things were. We identified with Superman, Batman, Sub-Mariner, and the rest of them without giving much thought to it. If you've never seen a black hero, you don't spend a lot of time wondering where they are. Today, you would, but, back then, there were no blacks in ads. It just didn't happen." Evans wanted to change all this. He considered himself an urban American born in the 20th century, fully integrated into the Western world. He and his wife were long-time supporters of the NAACP and the Urban League. The works of W.E.B. Du Bois spoke more to him than did those of Marcus Garvey. Indeed, he possessed a library said to be possibly the finest in the black community with volumes not only of Afrocentric interest or white commentaries on what was termed "the Negro problem," but a library that represented his own wide range of interests, and he wanted to produce a comic book that would reflect these values.

As with all his other projects, Evans threw himself wholeheartedly into his proposed comic book. He arranged a publishing partnership that included Harry T. Saylor (editor at the Record) and his friend Bill Driscoll (the sports editor). Evans was determined that the comic book should be of high moral and educational standards. He co-created the features in the comic book along with the artists, who included his brother, George J. Evans Jr., along with two other Philadelphia cartoonists, one named John Terrill and the other named Cooper, and a Baltimore artist who signed his work Cravat. The cartoonists probably wrote their own scripts, and there was further editorial input by Driscoll. Hope remembers this as a happy time for him and that he was involved in every step of the comic book's production, having secured a bullpen-production area in another building.

All Negro Comics # 1 carries a cover date of June 1947. No information about the press run or distribution remains, but it is believed that the title was distributed outside of the Philadelphia area.

A second issue was planned and the art completed, but, when Evans was ready to publish, he found that his source for newsprint would no longer sell to him — nor would any of the other vendors he contacted.

Though Evans was unyielding in his support of integration and civil rights, he was moderate in his methods of achieving these goals. He said he believed in the general fairness of the system he had been born into. He was not a man given to conspiratorial thinking, but his family remembers that his belief was that there was pressure being placed on newsprint wholesalers by bigger publishers and distributors who didn't welcome intrusions on their established territories.

Surely, mainstream publishers had an interest in cultivating the African-American market. Parents' Magazine published two issues of Negro Heroes, dated Spring 1947 and Summer 1948, featuring reprints from their Calling All Girls, Real Heroes, and True Comics. serted into black newspapers, but All Negro Comics was not only the first comic book to be marketed to blacks, it was the only comic book produced by blacks and the only comic book featuring black characters in lead heroic roles.

After this, black characters pretty much disappeared from comics except for background in the jungle books, where the day was always saved by white jungle kings.

Blacks were never seen in street scenes, never anguished over lost romances, or romped in teen-age innocence.

Dell's Tarzan comic books probably featured blacks in the greatest variety of roles (with considerable attention by artist Jesse Marsh to such details as tribal body language and culture), eventually introducing the Brothers of the Spear back-up feature in the 1950s. Gabe Jones appeared as a member of the Howling Commandos beginning in 1963. The Black Panther was created by Lee and Kirby and made his debut in Fantastic Four #52, July 1966. A series of black-history comics were released under the general title of Golden Legacy between 1966 and 1972. There were 16 issues published, with most reprinted in 1976 and again in 1983. The last American edition of Classics Illustrated, #169, was Negro Americans — The Early Years published in 1969.

Evans returned to the newspaper business. He was an editor at the Chester Times and later at the Philadelphia Bulletin, where he worked with Lewis. Lewis said, "Evans had many contacts throughout the city of Philadelphia and the region. He knew the people who were running the city and he knew the people who were at the bottom, and he was equally at ease in either community. He was well-liked and well-versed and that made him a very valuable person in a newsroom."

During his lifetime, Evans was featured in articles in Jet and Ebony magazines. He was a director of the Philadelphia Press Association and an officer of the Newspaper Guild of Greater Philadelphia.

In 1966, he won the Inter Urban League of Pennsylvania Achievement Award. He covered more National Urban League and NAACP conventions than any other reporter and the month before his death he was honored in a resolution at the annual NAACP convention in Minneapolis and a scholarship was created in his name.

At the time of Evans' death, Lewis wrote that perhaps Evans' greatest virtue was that he hadn't been left bitter by past experiences, but always believed that the good in humans would prevail.

'All Negro Comics' #1: A synopsis

By Tom Christopher

[Spoiler Warning: The following synopsizes complete plots of the stories that make up All Negro Comics #1.]

Ace Harlem by John Terrell opens the comic book. The story begins early one morning in Pop's Bar-B-Que Shack "before the early morning sharp chicks and smooth studs drift in." Two jive-talking zoot-suiters enter and kill Pops while robbing the place. The only witness, a beautiful girl, calls the police, and Ace Harlem, famed Negro detective is sent to investigate. Ace immediately takes in all the clues and is led to the herb store of "Doctor" Ali Ben, who puts him hot on the trail of the thief, who purchased his good luck root from the Doctor. The crooks, meanwhile, have had a falling out and the more-belligerent Lizard has killed his companion just as Ace comes upon the scene. Lizard runs and is pursued. During a confrontation at the top of a rickety flight of steps Lizard trips and eventually is strangled on his long watch chain, which was the instrument of death in the previous killings. The story is well-written with natural dialogue. Terrell's art is always competent and often quite forceful in the bold Caniff style of the day.

The next strip, Dew Dillies by Cooper is an odd one. It's about — well — these pixies, only one is a mermaid and the other is a young boy. They're all young, really, and later there's a mean one that's half-alligator, called a goolygator. They're looking for something to eat but can't agree on any of their immediate choices, a clam and a duck, because of the interconnectedness of all life, and settle on a fruitarian feast. The story is wordy in an old-fashioned manner, but the art is well-designed and executed in a classic children's-book style that would have fit well in a "funny animal" comic book.

"Ezekiel's Manhunt," a two-page text story, is next. While a typical boys' adventure story, it was doubtless the first time in a comic book that a sentence like "His white teeth shone against his smooth dark brown skin," was applied to the clever young hero who outwits the crazed murderer hiding in the old shack.

Lion Man by George J. Evans Jr. follows. "American born, college educated Lion Man is a young scientist, sent by the United Nations to watch over the fearsome 'magic mountain' of the African Gold Coast. Within its crater lies the world's largest deposit of uranium — enough to make an atom bomb that could destroy the world." Lion Man is joined by a young orphan, Bubba, who's just big enough to get in the way. This story concerns Doctor Blut Sangro, an evil figure, and his guide, Brossed the beachcomber, in what seems to be the first chapter of an ongoing conflict. The characters are well-defined, and Evans' art is simple and realistic, possibly showing the influence of early Alex Raymond.

"Hep Chicks on Parade," a page of gag cartoons about overly fashionable women signed LEN is next. The artist delivers a lovely example of '40s girlie gags.

Li'l Eggie a humor feature about a diminutive husband with wife and money woes, fills the next page. John Terell, the Ace Harlem artist, checks in with a humorous shorty in a lighter style that would easily fit among the better-drawn humor strips of the day.

Sugarfoot by Cravat completes the issue. Sugarfoot and his pal Snake Oil are traveling musicians who, this first time out, are involved in trying to hustle a meal out of an old farmer — and also hustle his beautiful daughter, Ample. Cravat draws in an energetic cartoony style somewhat like Harvey Kurtzman.

An introductory editorial, a public service announcement warning, "Crime does not pay," and encouraging a strong community through church, education, and sports round out the issue along with the promise that the second issue will feature stories of "Negro Trailblazers and Sports Heroes."

More thought went into All Negro Comics #1 than I can briefly recap. Ace Harlem works as a detective story: The dialogue is realistic, and the incidentals of the story, the root doctor and the juke box playing "Open the Door, Richard" reflect the culture of the creators, as do Sugarfoot and "Hep Chicks." Lion Man, a character surprisingly like Lee and Kirby's Black Panther, is a well-thought-out concept with a secret laboratory and a pesky junior sidekick and features good, pulpy jungle action. The comic book looks pretty much the same as a Fox, Iger, or Chesler comic book of the same time period

E.C. is 55: A captioned look after more than half a century

By Maggie Thompson

1997 is the year in which comics collectors note that it has been 75 years since the birth of William M. Gaines and 55 years since his creation, E.C. Comics, was born. Entire books have been done on E.C. — and it takes several books to reprint today what came out as four-color comics decades ago. (Collectors looking for an index to everything ever connected with E.C. couldn't do better, by the way, than Grant Geissman's Collectibly Mad. Despite its title, it also deals with such material as E.C. Fan Addict Kits, E.C. fanzines, and even lobby cards from Amicus Films' Tales from the Crypt. It's a checklist and price guide — and it's incredibly packed with photos. However, the Kitchen Sink volume is in black-and-white (and a mere $25 at your local comics shop). To convey a more colorful impression of what E.C. was and why it is collected to this day, covers and pages are reproduced here — along with some background material.

Those who want to sample complete E.C. stories can do so via Gemstone Publishing at comics shops. For example, shipping in April are Tales from the Crypt #20, Weird Science #20, and Panic #2 for $2.50 each. Those who want to have a complete chunk of E.C. output can get The Complete Weird Science in oversize, black-and-white (shot from the original art) hardcover format for $90 at the same time.

Anecdotes and footnotes abound for this trailblazing company. Its artists are generally acknowledged to be among the most highly regarded in the field, their work used as reference by generations of comics artists who followed in their footsteps.

Shock SuspenStories #1's cover had featured an electrocution, but only the subject's arm and hand were shown. By #7, a less-discreet view was offered. (The issue is © 1952 Tiny Tots Comics Inc., by the way.)

Decades before Keiji Nakazawa's Barefoot Gen reached America, E.C.'s Wally Wood brought home some of the horror experienced by Japanese civilians during World War II in "Atom Bomb!" (Two-Fisted Tales #33).

The work of "Ghastly" Graham Ingels, who used "The Old Witch" as his narrator, was distinctively creepy.

As E.C. realigned its titles to face new pressures, it initiated Piracy*, with its first issue dated October-November 1954. To promote it, Wally Wood's house ad showed the pirate crew responsible, including Al Williamson dueling a seagull and Gaines as pirate captain.*

Who was William M. Gaines?

By Bhob Stewart

[Editor's note: This information is based on Stewart's article which appeared in The Encyclopedia of American Comics*, edited by Ron Goulart.]*

The publisher of Mad and of the E.C. line of comic books in the 1950s, Gaines was the son of comics pioneer M.C. Gaines. Born in New York in 1922, Gaines grew up with a penchant for puns and practical jokes and a fondness for fantasy radio shows such as The Witch's Tale. He flunked out of Brooklyn's Polytechnic Institute during his junior year and joined the Army Air Corps in 1942.

After the war, he coedited Picture Stories from Science for his father's Educational Comics. He was studying at NYU to become a teacher when he inherited E.C. in 1947. He gradually transformed a line of funny animal titles into crime, romance, and Western books. In 1950 Gaines launched the "New Trend" line — with E.C. now standing for Entertaining Comics. These new ECs offered science fiction with Weird Fantasy and Weird Science, crime with Crime SuspenStories, and horror/fantasy with The Haunt of Fear, The Vault of Horror, and Tales from the Crypt. Eventually Gaines added Frontline Combat, Two-Fisted Tales, Shock SuspenStories, Mad, Panic, and Piracy. His science-fiction titles adapted the short stories of Ray Bradbury, initially without Bradbury's knowledge or consent, to comic books.

Gaines assembled a gifted editorial staff — Harvey Kurtzman, Al Feldstein, and Johnny Craig — and hired the more talented artists in the field. Unlike most publishers, he was closely involved in the story material, from devising plot premise springboards to proofreading. The result was a runaway success, widely imitated at the time and very influential for years to come. In 1954 Gaines was caught in the wave of negative publicity generated by investigations into suspected links between comic books and juvenile delinquency, and pressure from parents' groups and distributors prompted Gaines to cancel the line.

He attempted to rally, first with his "New Direction" comics and then with a group of black-and-white titles. Finally, he concentrated solely on Mad, edited by Feldstein after Kurtzman's departure. Gaines turned it into an impressive success, after converting it from a comic book into a black-and-white magazine, and there have been endless spinoffs and reprints. July 17, 1990, he told Grant Geissman, "They'll either carry me out or they'll fire me; I'm not gonna retire!" Gaines died in his sleep June 3, 1992. Geissman wrote, "True to his word, he never retired, working in the office until a few days before his demise ... his schedule called for him to work at the office the day after his death."

Bill Gaines' line of comics attracted devoted readers. In recent years, most of his fans probably knew him best from Mad*, the surviving title of his line.*

The Biblical origins of E.C. Comics

By Ron Goulart

The E.C. comic-book line began its life not with titles offering gritty, realistic war stories; dark, sardonic mystery; grisly, ironic horror; or irreverent, satiric humor. The cornerstone of the company was a wholesome, inspirational publication titled Picture Stories from the Bible. And the initial batch of Biblical stories was seen first, not on newsstands, but in the weekly editions of a single Connecticut-based newspaper.

William Gaines' father, Maxwell C. Gaines, had begun his professional life as a salesman during Prohibition. It was while working for the Eastern Color printing outfit in Connecticut that he was active in developing and promoting Famous Funnies, the first regularly issued, modern-format comic book. He went to work for the McClure Syndicate in New York City in the middle 1930s. Late in 1935, Dell introduced Popular Comics, a reprint title to compete with Famous. The new magazine was packaged for Dell at McClure, whose color presses Gaines was utilizing to cash in on the just-starting comic-book boom. To edit Popular, he hired Sheldon Mayer, a teen-age cartoonist.

The second title the team produced for Dell was The Funnies, in the summer of 1936. The Comics came along early in 1937. The following year, Gaines, at the urging of the enthusiastic Mayer, sent Siegel and Shuster's proposed newspaper strip over to DC. That resulted in Superman's becoming the runaway hit of Action Comics. Toward the end of 1938, Gaines entered into an agreement to produce a series of comics that would be published under the DC imprint. The first titles, edited by Mayer, were Movie Comics and All-American, both of which hit the stands as 1939 was starting.

Despite being instrumental in the emergence of Superman, the senior Gaines never thought too much of super-heroes. He was, however, not above exploiting them. At the urging of young Mayer, he introduced a pair of them in his next title, Flash Comics. This gave The Flash and Hawkman to the world. The Green Lantern was added to All-American, and Wonder Woman was installed as the star of the new Sensation Comics. M.C. Gaines, however, felt that the comics medium could be used for better things. Some time late in 1941, he began working on Picture Stories from the Bible. Note that he didn't christen his project Bible Comics. Instead, he sought a more polite phrase to describe the funny-book format, finally settling on "picture stories."

In a 1942 article for Print (yet another euphemism for comics was used in the title — "narrative illustration"), Gaines touted his newest venture, though without identifying himself with it. "Within the last several months," he wrote, "an experiment has been made in the use of stories from the Bible, using the comic book colored continuity technique. A series of ten ran in a New England paper, and responses indicated such wide acceptance that a 10-cent, 64-page book, Picture Stories from the Bible, has lately gone on sale."

The newspaper in question was the Bridgeport-based Connecticut Herald. A Sunday-only paper, which has been described as the National Enquirer of its day, it was owned an operated by Leigh Danenberg. An entrepreneur, Danenberg also used his plant to print comic books, and his tabloid newspaper had not only a Connecticut edition, but editions distributed in Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

The Bible stories appeared in the form of eight-page booklets, emulating the format established by Will Eisner in his The Spirit Sunday funny inserts. The first one appeared Sunday, April 5, 1942.

In order to turn the newspaper insert into a viable comic book, the reader had to do a bit of work. The pages were printed on a single folded sheet of newsprint, and "to make your own eight-page booklet ... (1) Cut along this solid line. (2) Fold along dotted line 'A'. (3) Insert pins on inside fold."

In concluding his Print piece, Gaines stated that perhaps the next chapter in the history of comic books "will record how beauty, in layout and design, was heightened without estranging the people who loved them as they were." For his Bible venture, however, Gaines picked a stodgy journeyman cartoonist named Don Cameron to turn out the picture stories.

The scripts, based on Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish versions of Old Testament stories, were by a writer named Montgomery Mulford. An author who was capable of giving the serpent in the Garden of Eden an aside like, "Ha! Ha! She's tempted!" may not have been the best man for the job. Sheldon Mayer, by the way, thought the whole enterprise was a mistake and had very little to do with it.

The first issue of the Picture Stories from the Bible comic book, with the DC logo on the cover, appeared in the summer of 1942. Eventually there were seven issues of the magazine, four devoted to the Old Testament and three to the New Testament. Cameron remained the artist throughout. Those issues sold several million copies.

In 1945, while Gaines was preparing Picture Stories from American History, he ended his association with DC. "Max demanded $500,000, free and clear after taxes," Frank Jacobs wrote in The Mad World of William Gaines. "He got it, after which he announced his retirement. Two weeks later, he was back in business, happy again to be his own boss and not having to report to any partner."

The elder Gaines retained his Picture Stories series and formed a new company, eventually called Educational Comics Inc. The first two issues of American History sold 600,000 copies, and he was able to get orders from 800 schools around the country. A story in the Aug. 8, 1946, issue of Newsweek reported, "Gaines and his board of educators are now laying out a World History taking the reader from cave-man days through the Fall of Rome, as well as a Science History. He plans eventually to bind them all together into a 4-inch encyclopedia. 'The kid who masters those 4 inches,' he asserts, 'will be an educated kid.'"

Gaines never did achieve much beauty with his educational titles. Don Cameron drew the two issues of the subsequent science series and Allen Simon, a bush-leaguer from one of the sweatshops, did the history stuff. Gaines also tried some non-didactic titles — Animal Fables, Tiny Tots Comics, etc.

He was planning more educational titles but was killed in a boating accident in the summer of 1947.

His son took over the E.C. company and decided to take it in some new directions. The enterprising Leigh Danenberg had apparently been influenced by printing for Gaines. In early 1946, he introduced Picture News, borrowing part of his title from Gaines' comics. This was intended to be a funny-book version of news magazines like Life, and it devoted space to coverage of Joe Louis' latest fight, a review of the movie version of Caesar and Cleopatra, a profile of Cardinal Spellman, a report on the atomic bomb tests at Bikini Atoll, etc. It lasted for just 10 issues.

Comics Code staffers objected to this story, drawn by Al Williamson and Roy Krenkel and colored by Marie Severin. Code enforcers said that the flying lizards were satires on angels. Then they objected to the ending, with Earthmen defeated by an intelligent plant. E.C. was forced to add an eighth page to the story so the Earthmen would win. That wrecked the budget on Incredible Science Fiction #32 — a page of paid advertising had to be dropped to make room for the eighth page.

"Janie Some Day," a story about a girl with congenital osteomyelitis, was drawn by George Evans. Nothing quite like the stories that ran in M.D. has ever appeared in commercial comics since.

The last comic-book version of Mad was dated May 1955. The next issue was in magazine format — as it has been ever since.

Ed Wheelan and the birth of E.C. Comics

By Ron Goulart

Frequently overlooked when the history of the early days of EC Comics is recounted, veteran cartoonist Ed Wheelan, nonetheless, played an important part in the company's development. He was solely responsible for one of the first EC titles, Fat and Slat. These two characters, billed as "Ed Wheelan's Famous Fools," had been around since the early 1920s, initially as part of the cast of his newspaper strip Minute Movies. With the help of M.C. Gaines and Editor Sheldon Mayer, Wheelan was able to revive them for comic books and eventually to star them in a comic book of their own.

WELL, SLAT, HERE WE ARE AGAIN ON THE STAGE OF THE "COMIC BOOK THEATRE", BUT WHAT ARE WE SUPPOSED TO BE TODAY ?
DON'T TELL ANYBODY, FAT, BUT I THINK WE'RE SUPPOSED TO BE A COUPLA FUNNY PAGES !
THOSE MAD WAGS WITH THE BAD GAGS"
FAT
SLAT

Wheelan had begun his Minute Movies strip in 1921, offering parodies and spoofs of various types of motion pictures. He kidded the hokum and sentimentality of films and built up a "stock company" of regular "actors." There was handsome leading man Dick Dare, virginal blonde Hazel Dearie, villainous Ralph McSneer, etc. The two comedians who worked for Wheelan Pictures, Ink, were Fuller Phun, the fat one, and Archibald Clubb, the thin one who frequently played cops.

The strip folded in the middle 1930s, but Wheelan was eventually able to get work in the burgeoning comic-book business. M.C. Gaines' short-lived Movie Comics, edited by Sheldon Mayer, reprinted some of his Minute Movie strips. At the very end of 1939, Flash Comics got under way, offering such new heroes as The Flash, Hawkman, and The Whip. A longtime admirer of Wheelan, Mayer hired him to draw new material for the magazine. The feature was called Flash Picture Novels but, within a year, it had changed to Minute Movies, and all the regulars were back at work. All in all, there were 43 new Minute Movies produced for the comic book. Late in 1942, Wheelan had Fuller Phun and Archibald Clubb team for a one-page strip selling war bonds and stamps. This was the first time they were cast as Fat and Slat, a cross between an old baggy-pants vaudeville team and the then-still-popular Mutt and Jeff.

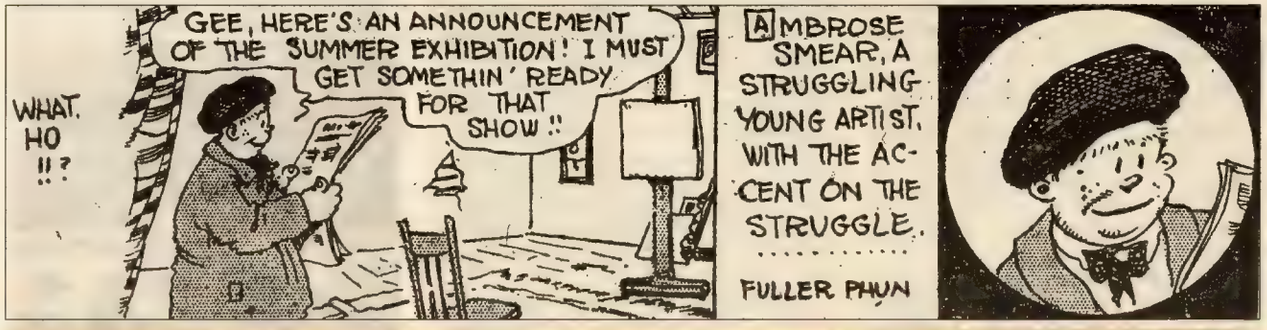
1944 saw the advent of Ed Wheelan's Joke Book Starring Fat and Slat. Copyrighted by Gaines' All-American Comics Inc., the one-shot was actually published by Wm. H. Wise & Company. The inside front cover featured a message from the cartoonist beneath a photo of him sitting at his drawing board. He explained that "Fat and Slat represent all that was 'corny' yet lovable in the old small-time vaudeville teams. They were originally members of my 'Minute Movies' company ... Some of you may remember their real names, but for the purposes of this book they remain just Fat and Slat." The drawing was in Wheelan's dependable bigfoot style, a style that hadn't changed appreciably since he'd begun his career before the First World War. The jokes, as promised, were corny indeed —

Slat: Whoopee, Fat, here come the big patriotic parade!!

Call your sister so she won't miss it — Where is she?

Slat: Upstairs, Slat, waving her hair!

Fat: For the love of Pete, can't she afford a flag?!!



WHAT. HO !!?
GEE, HERE'S AN ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE SUMMER EXHIBITION! I MUST GET SOMETHIN' READY FOR THAT SHOW !!

FULLER PHUN

In the summer of 1947 Wheelan's clowns returned to the newsstands. The senior Gaines had left the DC umbrella and established his own company. Such titles as Picture Stories from the Bible were now appearing as EC Comics — the EC standing for "Educational Comics." But, in the EC logo on the covers of the new Fat and Slat quarterly, the letters stood for "Entertaining Comics." For the new magazine, Wheelan added Comics McCormick, dealing with "the world's No. 1 comic book fan," and offering spoofs of super-hero comic books. Supersnipe was already doing this sort of thing, but Wheelan's strip did it in a much livelier fashion. He also managed to toss in Old Man Experience, a feature he'd first done in newspapers in the second decade of the century.

The EC Fat and Slat made it through four issues, expiring early in 1948. M.C. Gaines was dead by that time, and his son, William, had taken over the company. As a sign of the changing times, Fat and Slat became a serious cowboy comic book called Gunfighter, offering "thrilling stories of the Wild West!" Wheelan's career was winding down by that time and he did not remain in comics that much longer. I once asked William Gaines if he had any recollections of Wheelan.

He answered that, as far as he knew, he'd never met the artist and had no recollection of him whatsoever.

The first issue of Modern Love (Jun-Jul '49) and the fifth of Moon Girl (Fall '48) flank the house ad that appeared in Modern Love*. This was the line at the time — a line whose evolution had already turned* Fat and Slat into Gunfighter*.* Moon Girl #5 carried the first E.C. horror story, "Zombie Terror," and therefore brings higher prices today than even the first issue of the title. A love title, a super-heroine title, two cowboy titles, and two crime titles gave little hint of the direction the line would soon take.

How 'Mad' became a magazine

Dear Mr. Silver Age:

How did EC's Mad comic book wind up as a magazine? Didn't it take a dramatic change to go from parodies like Superduperman to cartoons by guys like Don Martin and Dave Berg? If I don't learn the answer, I'm gonna crack!

Sylvester S.
New York City

Mr. Silver Age says: Eh, don't get sick on us, Sly! Even though it predates the Silver Age by a little bit, we can clue you in on this cool evolution.

Mad's transition occurred for two key reasons, as explained by Frank Jacobs in his 1972 book The Mad World of William M. Gaines. First, Mad's editor, the brilliant Harvey Kurtzman, was itching to move up to the more prestigious world of newsstand magazines and he was getting some offers. Converting Mad to a magazine would also avoid the new Comics Code instituted the previous year, which had had such tight restrictions it caused Gaines to shut down his popular horror line.

(E.C. had good reason for its concern about restrictions being placed on the Mad comic book, possibly by government. As early as 1953, Mad's sister comic book, Panic #1, had been banned in Massachusetts because it featured a Will Elder-drawn parody of "The Night before Christmas." State authorities said the story "desecrated Christmas," and the local distributor refused to handle it.)

So in the last comic-book-sized issue, #23 (May 1955), EC announced, "We're expanding Mad into a regular big 25¢ magazine with pictures, printed lettering, covers, and everything, gang. Boy, what exciting plans. Are we excited." And with Mad #24 (July 1955), it switched to its current magazine size.

The editorial shift was not as dramatic as you might think, if your only reference points are the early Mad comics and today's magazine. First, the comic book had begun adding variety to its style toward the end. For instance, Mad #22 (April 1955) was the "Special Art Issue," a satiric look at Will Elder's career from cradle to grave. Five of the six stories were laid out with black-and-white photos in the typical EC style of a paragraph of copy above each panel.

In the magazine-sized Mad #24, many of the features had layouts similar to the title's old style: a paragraph of type above a panel of cartoon art. Kurtzman kept his three key artists — Jack Davis, Will Elder, and Wally Wood — and respectively gave them features about wrestling, a parody of the TV show This Is Your Life called "Is This Your Life?" and a satiric look at the possibilities of a flight to the moon. It also began what would be a recurring theme: two pages of comic-strip-style parodies by Elder that made the connection to Mad's former comic-book-style parodies.

But there were differences in the layouts, too. For instance, Davis's wrestling article opened with a full-page shot of a screaming, frantic crowd of fans (including parodies of Charles Addams' Gomez and Morticia) facing a page with the headline and intro, a spot illustration, and a half-page of type. That magazine-style layout then led into the more-typical Mad comic-book layout for the remaining eight pages.

The front cover featured an intricate border resembling a woodcut, with Alfred E. Neuman and his now-famous "What? Me Worry?" line in an oval at the center top. The remainder showed vignettes of famous folks, including Beethoven, Pasteur, Columbus, Rembrandt, Galileo, and, um, Lassie, reading Mad.

Kurtzman also got contributions from high-profile comedy writers of the time to supplement his writing. These were led by Ernie Kovacs, one of the biggest TV comedians of the time, who did a satire of Tom Swift books and contributed other features to later issues. Also writing were Roger Price, the creator of the then-popular word-game Droodles, and Bernard Shir-Cliff, an editor at Ballantine Books, where the Mad comics were being reprinted in paperback format. Writer Ira Wallach also contributed a two-page humorous short story.

Kurtzman put the magazine format to good use with his ad parodies, spotlighting "Bofforin" aspirin, "Bind-Aig" bandages, and "Jell-Y" gelatin on the covers. Additional interior ads featured "Pund's Cold Cream" and "Anasprin." This created an interesting situation in issue #27, when Mad did something else real magazines do: It accepted a real ad.

The editorial explained that up to then, Mad hadn't accepted advertising, not because the magazine was editorially pure, but because it couldn't get any. "On page 7 is our first real advertisement," the editorial said. "Please do what it asks." The one-third-page vertical ad promoted Bogen High Fidelity record players. A few more ads followed in later issues, notably a full-page spot for the Dollar Mystery Guild in #31 and the Famous Artists School full-pager in #32. It was a trend that soon stopped, and Gaines announced his pride that Mad didn't rely on advertising for revenues.

Norman Mingo's familiar rendition of Alfred E. Neuman first appeared on issue #30 (December 1956). The back cover shows the view from behind Alfred's head, with a bunch of famous people caricatured by Jack Davis laughing at Al.

NOW COMES THE MOST BRILLIANT PART OF HIS CAREER WHEN HE DID THE FOLLOWING PAINTINGS..."MONA LISA" (ACTUALLY MONA COZNOWSKI SITTING ON A FEATHER)!
..."BLUE BOY"..INSPIRED BY THE POEM... "LITTLE BOY BLUE, COME BLOW YOUR HORN"! NOTE HOW THE "BLUE BOY" RUBS WHERE THE FARMER HIT FOR NOT TENDING THE SHEEP!
"GEORGE WASHINGTON"! ELDER STARTED THIS PAINTING WITH THE INTENTION OF DUPLICATING A DOLLAR BILL BUT WAS INTERRUPTED BY THE TREASURY DEPT.! HENCE THE UNFINISHED PORTION!
"YOUNG WOMAN WITH A WATER JUG"..HERE WE SEE ONE OF YOUNG ELDERS MANY GIRL-FRIENDS... THIS ONE JUST COME FROM THE BARBER-SHOP, TOWELS AND ALL... WAS IN THE ACT OF THROWING SLOP INTO THE BACK LOT INSTEAD OF THE GARBAGE-PAIL!
"WHISTLER'S MOTHER"..NOTE THE TENSE EXPRESSION ON THE SUBJECT DUE TO HER SON'S CONSTANT MADDENING WHISTLING IN THE NEXT ROOM WHICH SHE BY THE WAY ENDED WITH A SMALL REVOLVER SHE HELD CONCEALED IN HER 'KERCHIEF!

In Mad #22 (April 1955), Editor Harvey Kurtzman replaced the usual art with photos, producing a different look for the comic book that helped Mad later make the transition to a magazine format.

The cover of Mad #25 (September 1955) shows it targeted adults; a joke relying on a political cartoon from the 1870s Tammany Hall scandals in New York wouldn't be expected to make 12-year-olds roll on the floor.

MAD

The magazine clearly was targeted at a more adult audience than the comic book had been, and this continued with later issues. For instance, the cover of #25 (September 1955) featured a joke using an 1870s-era political cartoon by Thomas Nast about New York City's mayor, Boss Tweed — not exactly humor designed to have 12-year-olds rolling in the aisle.

Contributors in these issues included Stan Freberg (the guy CBG columnist Mark Evanier recently praised for his humor records); Steve Allen; and Doodles Weaver (who appeared on Spike Jones' popular TV show). These line-ups would be akin to having people like Jerry Seinfeld, Dave Barry, and Dennis Miller contributing today.

Subject themes, too, began to settle into place. In #26 (November 1955), Mad parodied the ways different magazines would treat the same story and satirized suburban highways, boxing, and golf. Issue #27 kicked off Phil Interlandi's "Scenes We'd Like to See" recurring strip and Will Elder's Norman Rockwell-style back-cover parodies. Russ Heath illustrated a satiric "Sea Chanty," and other features included a humorous essay on bullfighting, a parody of the Ed Sullivan Show, and a reprint of cartoons from the turn of the century, also a recurring feature.

Modern furniture eliminates ugly extensions like drawer-pulls, so as not to break up the smooth sleek lines. Here you see a chest of drawers with draw-pulls cleverly concealed . . .
The drawer-pulls are cleverly concealed underneath these . . . er . . . On the side of these . . . er . . . They're here someplace!
Ha, yes. Here we are! See what I mean about not breaking up those smooth sleek lines . . .
20

There's not much of Dave Berg's "Lighter Side Of..." style in the first article he illustrated for Mad*, in issue #34 (August 1957). But his interest in all things suburban already was apparent.*

Layouts began to diverge from the EC look. Two-page spreads dragged graphics across the gutter, and designs offered more variety in panel sizes and type placement. The format continued to evolve, but by issue #28, Kurtzman and his crew had set both a humor tone and design style that left far behind the magazine's roots as a comic book.

And then Kurtzman quit. Feeling his efforts deserved more reward, he asked for part ownership in EC, Jacobs wrote. Gaines refused and Kurtzman left, taking with him Davis and Elder. (Davis returned in 1965.)

Gaines quickly rehired his former comic-book editor (and editor of the Panic comic book), Al Feldstein, got Production Editor John Putnam to agree to stay on, and hoped for the best.

A few days after Feldstein started, he was visited by an aspiring cartoonist who was hired immediately. Don Martin's contributions began appearing in #29, as one-page gags called "Alfred E. Neuman Answers Your Questions." Feldstein also added former E.C. comics contributors Basil Wolverton, Jack Kamen, and several other artists to the mix.

Issue #30 (December 1956) kicked off with the first painted cover featuring Alfred E. Neuman, done by Norman Mingo. His version of the character — and his many-year run of covers featuring Alfred — became the standard look. The issue also added Bob Clarke, who became another perennial. In issue #31, Feldstein eliminated the cover border, giving Mingo's cover art more room. In #32, he added Mort Drucker, who went on to become one of the best caricaturists ever.

Dave Berg illustrated his first article, on "Modern Furniture," in issue #34 (August 1957). It was far from the style he became known for in his "The Lighter Side Of..." features, but his fascination with suburban fashions and lifestyles was clear. Feldstein added other artists, too, including Frank Kelly Freas and former EC-er Joe Orlando. He also began expanding his writers' list, with names like Bob and Ray (radio comedians); Orson Bean (a popular comedian and game-show panelist); and E. Nelson Bridwell (who went on to become a DC editor).

By its "Special 5th Anniversary Issue" in #35 (October 1957), Mad was a magazine that today's readers could recognize easily. As time passed, however, the topics began to shift away from mature humor and name-brand authors to topics of interest to the continually younger age bracket that bought the magazine. Baby Boomers became the target in the 1960s, and that youth trend continues today.

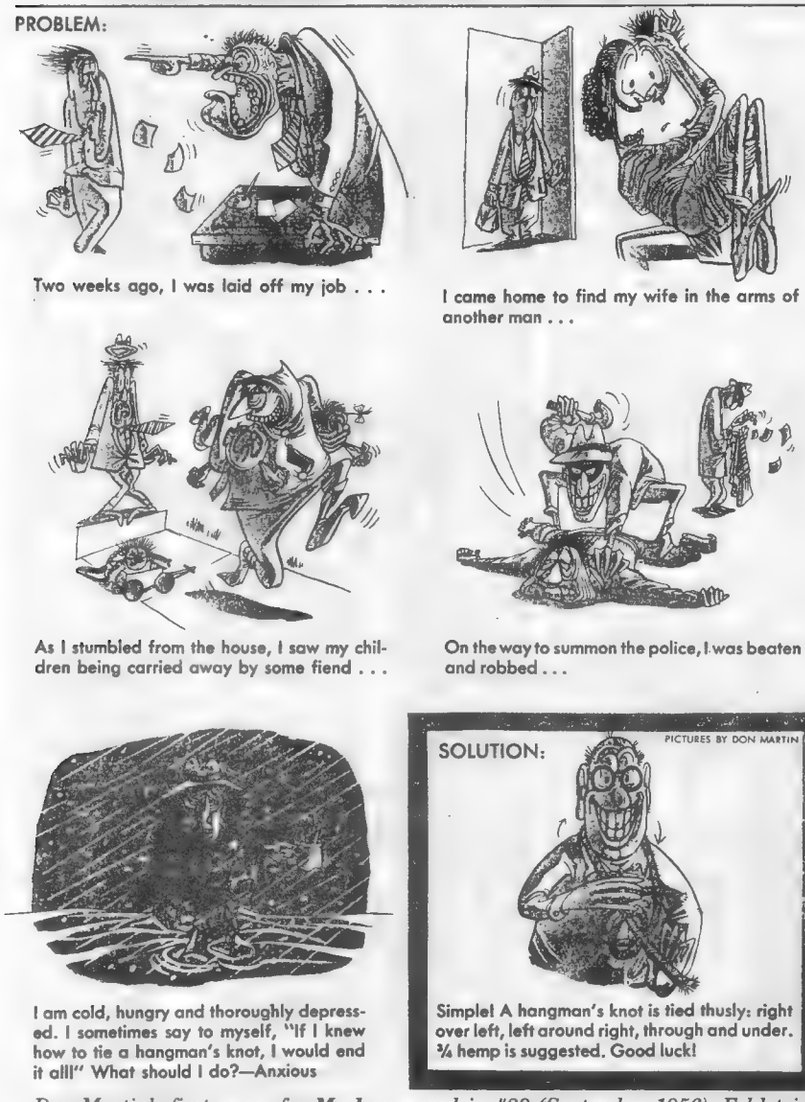
It's ironic that, as Mr. Silver Age grew older, Mad downshifted its focus from humor about cocktail parties, buying new cars, and advertising to jokes about report cards, barfing, and zits.

I don't know when exactly we passed each other on the scale of interests. But I think it's too bad that much of the humor of Mad now is something you grow out of rather than grow into.

Here's hoping Mad's new look and new direction, beginning with #356 in March, brings back some of the old bite and grown-up humor that used to be its forte.

ADVICE DEPT. PART I

ALFRED E. NEUMAN ANSWERS YOUR QUESTIONS



PROBLEM:
Two weeks ago, I was laid off my job . . .
I came home to find my wife in the arms of another man . . .
As I stumbled from the house, I saw my children being carried away by some fiend . . .
On the way to summon the police, I was beaten and robbed . . .
I am cold, hungry and thoroughly depressed. I sometimes say to myself, "If I knew how to tie a hangman's knot, I would end it all!" What should I do?—Anxious
SOLUTION:

Don Martin's first pages for Mad appeared in #29 (September 1956), Feldstein's first issue as editor. Martin soon was illustrating stand-alone cartoons and thinking up hilarious sound effects.

Wildstorm releases lost X-Men cover

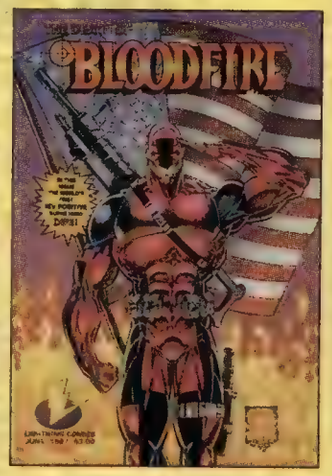
WildStorm will release a "lost" X-Men cover by Neal Adams as part of its Marvel cover print series.

At the end of the 1960s, Adams took over the art on The X-Men for a brief run beginning with issue #56. His first X-Men cover, however, never saw print. According to Adams, Marvel turned the cover down because it felt the logo was obscured by the figures of The X-Men. Adams drew a different cover for #56, and his initial try was put aside.

The cover will at last see the light of day in May, when WildStorm Fine Arts, with permission from Marvel and Adams, is scheduled to release it as a print. WildStorm will color the art and reproduce it as an iris print. The 15˝x20˝ print, like the others in the series, will be printed on archival watercolor paper and is limited to 300 numbered copies, each of which is signed by Adams. Suggested retail price for the X-Men #56 iris print is $150.

Bloodfire dies of A.I.D.S.

Special issue ships with condom



Lightning Comics has announced that Bloodfire, known as the first H.I.V. positive comic-book super-hero, will die in The Death of Bloodfire, scheduled for May. An "A.I.D.S. Awareness Edition" will be shrink-wrapped with a condom.

Lightning said a portion of the profits generated from the sales of the A.I.D.S. Awareness issue will be donated to A.I.D.S. research.

When the first issue of Bloodfire appeared in June of 1993, the series attracted media attention due to the super-hero's H.I.V. origin.

Creator Joe Zyskowski said, "Bloodfire's primary mission was to create A.I.D.S. awareness and break the stereotype of A.I.D.S. as a 'gay disease.' We feel it's important to remind people that A.I.D.S. is still out there and that it kills. It even kills super-heroes. We hope Bloodfire's death might actually save real lives."

The Death of Bloodfire will ship exclusively to the direct market, with a price of $3. The shrink-wrapped edition will be priced at $9.95.

Creators return to WildStorm titles

The April-shipping issues of WildStorm's two longest-running titles will be reunited with some of the series' original creators.

With issue #37, WildC.A.T.S: Covert Action Teams will once again be written by co-creator Brandon Choi, in a complete makeover for the title that also includes co-writer Jonathan Peterson and penciller Mat Broome. Inker Troy Hubbs, who inked Travis Charest's run on the title, will remain on board. Choi was co-creator of most of WildStorm's first titles but hasn't been the regular writer on WildC.A.T.S since issue #9.

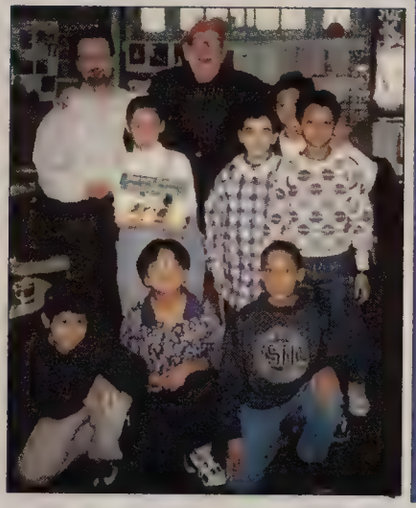
Among Choi's changes for the series is the return of Emp following the departure of Savant and Majestic for the pages of Savant Garde. Meanwhile, Grifter and John Colt are experiencing tension over Zealot.

While Choi returns to WildC.A.T.S on an ongoing basis, Jim Lee pays a temporary return visit to StormWatch. Though involved in its creation, Lee has never pencilled the series. That will change with issue #47, as Lee provides pencil art, with Scott Williams inking.

WildStorm Editor in Chief Mike Heisler said, "We were looking at using a fill-in penciller for StormWatch #47, as we needed to buy Tom Raney some time for the 'Change or Die' three-parter that runs through issues #48-#50 ... Warren got back to me the next day with this sharp idea for an all-splash-page story, which featured a weird twist on some classic WildStorm villains. I started throwing out names of some of the guys in the studio who'd be available to draw it, and Warren gently interrupted me to suggest asking Jim. Jim's been very supportive of the new direction the book's taken, and it took him all of a minute to say yes."

Snuffy Smith's Uncle Fred visits fifth-graders



Snuffy Smith artist Fred Lasswell recently visited R. Robert Pollak's fifth-grade class at P.S. 230 in Brooklyn, N.Y. The class had written letters to Lasswell after viewing his how-to-draw videos, and the artist agreed to pay a personal visit.

"Uncle Fred" answered students' questions, drew with the class, and signed autographs. The class learned about the history of the American comic strip and got hands-on experience drawing a comic strip with the help of Lasswell. The students also learned to decode the hillbilly dialect spoken by Snuffy, "Loweezy," and other characters in Lasswell's popular, long-running comic strip.

Pollak has been using comic strips as a learning tool for several years. His classes have received positive messages from, among others, Brenda Starr's Dale Messick and Ramona Fradon, Smilin' Jack's Zack Mosley, Buck Rogers' Murphy Anderson, and Star Wars' Al Williamson. King Features and Tribune Media Services have provided Pollak with support material.

The machinations of Doctor Cyborg are written by Allan Gross and drawn by an art team composed of Mark Wheatley, Marc Hempel, and Damon Willis.

Please note that Sotheby's had a "Fall" A.C.G. committee convene in November so that many comics could be given advance grades. So, for the first time in auction history the ad you read above (with a few exceptions) already has the committee grades!! Remember that we are still consigning so there are bound to be other surprises in "high grade" unrestored Golden Age books.

For questions about the auction or consigning contact Dana Hawkes at (212) 606-7910 or Jerry Weist at (212) 606-7862. For subscriptions to receive our catalogue in advance please call (800) 444-3709.

"I love the smell of quarter boxes. It smells of victory."
Comic-book reader Mitchell Bruce

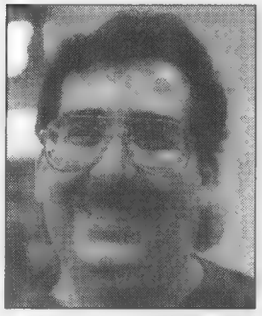
CBG Editor Maggie Thompson and I were having one of our not-frequent-enough conversations about the art or job or punishment of reviewing comic books. We both tend to concentrate our efforts on comics we enjoy but, in order to get to those treasured ponies, we have to dig through an awful lot of — you know.



"The repentant bride also had a third surprise for her husband, but, as all we could see in that final panel were his toes curling up, we can't be sure what it was. My guess would be she told him that she had renewed his CBG subscription."
— Tony Isabella

I told Maggie I had adopted the "eight-page rule" when it came to reading comic books. If the writer hasn't captured my interest in those first eight pages of his or her story, then I am out of there. Hello, I must be going. Thanks, but no thanks.

After all, I said, Will Eisner was able to give us an entire world in eight pages of The Spirit every week. I'm not expecting Eisner-quality work from every comics story I read, but I do insist there be some reason for me to read page nine and beyond. It can be an intriguing character, a witty bit of dialogue, or perhaps an unusual setting: something that makes me want to go the distance with the story. Give me that and I'm yours, baby.

That said, let us trot out this week's ponies and take them for a quick jaunt around the track.

☞ Archie's Pals 'n' Gals Double Digest Magazine (Archie, $2.75) has more than an incredibly long title going for it. Like all of the Archie double digests, it's a heck of a bargain: more than 200 pages of entertaining comics, including one or two new stories, in each and every issue.

The latest issue I read (#24) had several gems: a clever look at picture signs, a classic Archie and Mr. Lodge story, a funny object lesson about the responsibility of the press, a "class war" story featuring a pre-Pussycats Josie, a nice tribute to songsmith Billy Joel, and an amusing look at the 1940s through the eyes of today's teen-agers. Ironically enough, these particular teen-agers made their comics debut in the 1940s.

However, the highlight of the digest was the four-chapter tale called "Riverdale Redux — Orwell, Here We Go Again." It starts with Principal Weatherbee installing security cameras all over the high school, then continues with Archie's father being denied a loan because of a computer mistake, Mr. Lodge contending with an absurd government contract, and Reggie's newspaperman father going to jail to defend the freedom of the press. It's a humorous, sharp, and thoughtful look at some very contemporary issues.

Looking at this digest, I'm not surprised Archie comics are holding their own in the current market and even increasing their sales. We're talking good comics at a good price.

☞ In 1966 and thereabouts, when the stories collected in Legion of Super-Heroes Archives Vol. 6 (DC, $49.95) first appeared, I think most teen-age comics fans were of several minds about teen-age comics writer Jim Shooter. For my part, I was thrilled someone my own age was writing these terrific stories. I was also jealous someone my own age was writing these terrific stories. I figured Shooter had to be the happiest kid in the world.

It's 30 years later. Many comic-book fans (and comic-book pros, for that matter) are still of several minds about Shooter; his career is known for both his notable achievements and the loud controversies attending some of those achievements. We also know his teen years were hardly the idyllic fantasy we imagined back in those simpler times. As for those terrific stories — well, they're still terrific.

Some of my favorite Legion stories of all are in this handsome hardcover volume. There's a Nelson Bridwell two-parter that must have 50 characters on stage at various times. There's the two-issue classic, perhaps Shooter's finest hour, that introduced The Fatal Five and showed the heroic, stunning death of a Legionnaire.

There's the young author's wonderfully inventive look at The Adult Legion and the spooky aftermath to his Fatal Five tale.

These are great stories with great art (Curt Swan pencils, George Klein inks), suitable for readers of all ages. I recommend them to fans and libraries alike.

☞ Topps Comics Executive Editor Dwight Jon Zimmerman, for whom I write the occasional this or that, asked me the other day what I thought of his writing on Mars Attacks The Savage Dragon ($2.95), which, of course, I hadn't read. I don't care much for the work of the writer who had done the first few issues of the regular Mars Attacks title and had stopped following the series.

Zimmerman, being of relatively sound mind for this industry, correctly figured out that his only chance of getting a review here was to send me copies of the issues. That kind of thinking, by the way, is definitely encouraged.

I had some difficulty getting into the first of this four-issue series. As I said, I haven't been reading the regular Mars Attacks title and I haven't read more than the occasional issue of The Savage Dragon. I think the story needed to be more new-reader-friendly. All the same, the wild slugfest between the Martians and Chicago's finest and greenest was fun. As was the art by Claude St. Aubin and Larry Mahlstedt.

The second issue, on the other hand, won me over completely. It introduced me to a delightful heroine called Colleen MacKay. She's attractive, she's feisty, she's smart, and she has a great speech pattern. In short, she's my kind of woman. Here's a tip of the "Tips" to Zimmerman. I look forward to the rest of this series and more Mars Attacks comics in the future.

I'm thinking maybe Mars Attacks Regis and Kathie Lee.

☞ I don't really have one favorite Superman writer. Even when I haven't liked a particular storyline, I've generally been pleased with the high quality of the work by Dan Jurgens, Karl Kesel, David Michelinie, Louise Simonson, and Roger Stern. But, more often than not, when an issue really touches my heart, it turns out to have been written by Jurgens. "They Call It Suicide Slum" in Superman #121 (DC, $1.95) was one of those issues.

This is a story about hope in a seemingly hopeless situation.

Recently, on CompuServe's Comics and Animation Forum, Jurgens wrote (and I trust you and he will pardon my paraphrasing here) that the best Superman stories were, at their core, about hope. This issue certainly makes a good case for that theory, as Clark Kent ventures into perhaps the worst neighborhood in all of Metropolis.

"Suicide Slum. I admit I never gave the name much thought.

"Never considered how bad a place must be to earn such a title."

A judicious use of Kent's colorful alter-ego and equally low-key layouts — the latter so subtle it didn't hit me what writer-artist Jurgens had done until well after I'd finished this issue — drew me into that world and held me there beyond the final panel.

Now, that's a good comic book. Thanks, Dan. (And thanks also to art finisher Joe Rubinstein, letterer John Costanza, colorist Glenn Whitmore, separators Digital Chameleon, associate editor Mike McAvennie, Editor Joey Cavalieri, and Mike Carlin as "The Beaver.")

☞ Readers of Kurt Busiek's Astro City, the best super-hero comic book being published today, were pleasantly surprised to spot the title being enjoyed by a character in a recent Funky Winkerbean newspaper strip by Tom Batiuk. The strip appeared on Feb. 1.

It started a few days earlier, when newlyweds Les and Lisa had their first argument. Lisa, who foolishly thought Les wanted her honest opinion, had criticized some of her hubby's writing. And chicks claim guys are clueless.

Lisa made amends for her egregious offense by bringing Les two of the greatest joys of modern civilization: comic books and pizza.

The repentant bride also had a third surprise for her husband, but, as all we could see in that final panel were his toes curling up, we can't be sure what it was. My guess would be she told him that she had renewed his CBG subscription.

The one comic book clearly shown in the strip was Astro City, although part of a Superman logo was also visible. Investigative whiz that I am, I have learned what other comics Les was reading.

After seconds of my relentless questioning, Batiuk spilled his guts as if he were a cheap dribble glass. Les' favorite comics are Kurt Busiek's Astro City, Superman Adventures, Batman and Robin Adventures, Leave It to Chance, Wonder Woman, and The Grackle. It goes without saying that his favorite CBG column is the one you're reading now.

Batiuk also revealed that Lisa does not read comics. Sadly, I have to predict her marriage is in for some rocky going until she comes around. Poor Les.

Next week: Lies, Sex, and the Internet.

Tony Isabella, "America's most beloved comic-book writer and columnist," forgot to ask Batiuk what Les likes on his pizza. Since Les has been shown to a man of exemplary taste, Tony's guess would be black olives, mushrooms, and extra cheese.

KEY GOLDEN AGE FOR SALE

Action #1 This book is gorgeous. Front cover is VF- with deep rich colors. It has a very faint crease, only visible when holding at an angle, down the length of the cover. Back cover has 3 very small silverfish holes and 3 very light water stains. This description does not do the book justice. It is flat, clean, tight, and bright, has very white pages, and best of all, is totally unrestored. You just will not find a high grade unrestored copy for sale anywhere! $120,000

Action #1 Another copy. Very similar in appearance to above copy. Book is flat, clean, and bright and has white pages. There is a slight pull at top staple and small ¼"x1⁄16" piece coming loose just above top staple. "GIVE BLACKJACK A TRY" – Comic Shop News

He's a soldier of fortune battling powerful enemies, the ghosts of his past, and the bigotry of his time.

The fans respond:

"It is rare these days to have a comic with both great story and great art."

"...your book is something I could not put down."

"...all of my customers love Blackjack..."

"Blackjack...if they're all as good as the first two, I think they've got a winner here."
–Mark Evanier, Comic Buyers Guide

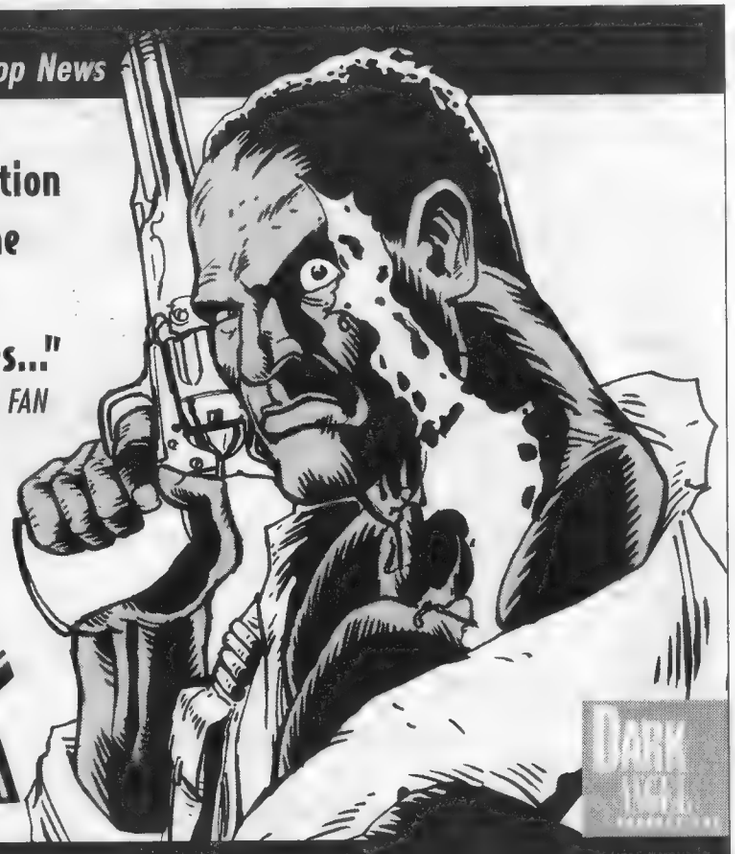
"...a classic action story in the style of Indiana Jones..."
–Overstreet's FAN



It is the 1930's, a good time for a dark hunter.

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

Trader Tips

The Trader ads in CBG are an easy and economical way to advertise. Simply design your ad in a space that is 8½" wide by 8½" high and send it along with payment ($40.00 per Trader space) and complete reference form to:

COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE
Advertising Department
700 E. State Street
Iola, WI 54990-0001

We'll reduce your ad to the proper size and place it in the issue(s) you request. If no specific issue(s) is requested, we'll run your ad in the next available issue.

Keep in mind that CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or symbols to Trader ads. The better your ad looks when you send it to us, the better it will look when it is reduced and published in CBG.

BRIAN CLOPPER BOMBASTIC

Are you looking for a comic filled with fun, whimsy and outlandish characters and concepts like a cosmic counselor who takes mortals on eye-popping adventures astride a dimension-hopping weevil named Bo? How about a duo of inept intergalactic Bounty Hunters, operating under the names Wingnut and Fidget? Or maybe a dimensional realm where all the magical and mythical creatures of Earth have fled to forge a multimystical society? BOMBASTIC has all of this and more!!

BOMBASTIC is a quirky, new comic series that debuted in November. Issue #2 ships the last week of February and Issue #3 is in your Previews catalog of May releases under Screaming Dodo Studios. Ask your retailer to order a sample copy for you. The all-ages splatter cover is worth the price of admission alone.

Signed copies of #1 and #2 are available from me for $3.25 an issue: All orders receive a free sketch by yours truly! Send checks to

Brian Clopper 21 Valley Park Court Damascus, MD 20872

Attention, Retailers! You can reorder directly from me for $1.50 an issue (40% off cover price) if you order at least 5 copies (can be different issues). Simply send me your business card or letterhead with your order. I am available and eager to do store signings. I am also carried by Cold Cut if you would like to order through them.

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

Comics Guide

By Maggie Thompson

• X-Men Unlimited #14 (Mar 97, Marvel, $2.99) is written by Terry Kavanagh, pencilled by Jim Cheung, and inked by Andrew Pepoy. "The One They Left Behind" has a striking cover, and the interior is a nice story, virtually standing alone, as Franklin Richards rages and grieves over the loss of what he had known and residents of Hank McCoy's home town come to terms with mutants in its midst. Solid work here.

• DC/Marvel: All Access #4 (Feb 97, $2.95) is written by Ron Marz, pencilled by Jackson Guice, and inked by Joe Rubinstein. The crossovers are more enjoyable the more readers know the cast and plot subtleties, but they make for great discussions for both long-time and short-time fans. Once again, characters are merging — leading into another Amalgam time. And, yes, a lot of readers really did ask for it. Me, too.

Average paid monthly circulation

CBG Circulation Scavenger Hunt
data collated by John Jackson Miller

While not generally counted among comics, Mad's sales were usually higher than for any comics title until the 1990s. The peak year: 1974, memorable for Watergate and the oil crisis. More than 400 million issues are estimated to be in print. Thanks to Mad collector Bob Reed of Commerce City, Colo., who provided this data to CBG.

The forwarding of an order is construed as acceptance of all rates and conditions in effect at the time the advertising is submitted. The publisher will not be bound by any conditions, printed or otherwise, appearing on any order for advertising space, billing instructions or copy instructions which conflict with its policies. Advertisers and advertising agencies assume liability for all content (including text representation and illustrations) of advertisements printed, and also assumes responsibility of any claims arising therefrom made against the publisher. I've just returned from a Marvel "writers' retreat" in Long Island. At that august gathering, an assortment of editors (including Bob Harras, Bobbie Chase, and Tom Brevoort) and creators (including such luminaries as Chris Claremont, Kurt Busiek, John Romita Sr., Tom DeFalco, Klaus Janson, Larry Hama, Scott Lobdell, and others who are going to be hacked off with me because I didn't mention them by name) gathered to try and sort out the "Leefeld universe."

The deal with Rob Liefeld and Jim Lee which has them rebooting the Marvel universe is slated to end around August of this year. Rumors have been rampant throughout fandom that an extension of the deal is being discussed.

But we were informed at this January meeting that Harras had been given the go-ahead by the Boys in the Back Room to plan the folding of the MIA heroes back into the Marvel universe. And, of course, the thought of the Boys changing their mind is absurd, so we proceeded on the assumption that the return of the heroes was a go.

Now it wouldn't be proper or cricket for me to go into detail as to precisely what was said and/or discussed.

In point of fact, nothing was absolutely, bottom-line decided upon.

Various ideas were tossed around, giving the editors food for thought as to which direction they should go.

However, there was something about the gathering that really impressed me. And considering the number of times in recent months that I've raked Marvel over the coals, I figure it's only fair that I finally say something positive.

I can't begin to count the number of times I've seen postings from fans on computer boards making snide comments about the creative personnel at Marvel.

I'm always reading that various creators are just hacking material out or are cynical, just going through the motions, sleepwalking through the stories, not giving a damn about the characters. In short, there's a plethora of nasty thoughts which would indicate that the creators are producing comic books about which they simply do not care.

I wish all of those sarcastic fans could have been flies on the wall at the meeting. Well — maybe not all of the fans, because that would be one hell of a lot of flies and there would have been lots of buzzing and, frankly, it would have been kind of disgusting.

What happened over the course of the three days' worth of meetings was that various people came up with an assortment of notions about how the re-merge should be handled. And each concept acquired supporters, as people started to form into several small "camps."

And in an extremely large meeting room, with all the tables formed into a giant circle (rectangle, square — whatever — you get the idea) the different camps locked horns as to what would be the best way to go. What storyline would be the best for the characters and, ultimately, for the readers.

I wouldn't say the discussion became heated, because that implies that there was anger. I don't think anyone got really angry with anyone else.

But the debate over the shape of the Marvel universe for 1997 was aggressively spirited.

And I was struck by (a two-by-four across the face? nah) the passion that the people around that large table had for the Marvel universe.

You think fans get into intense discussions? It's nothing compared to the enthusiasm in that room, as different creators put forward a variety of concepts.

Concepts which were then subjected to scrutiny, criticism, dissection.

The "old hands" around the table hurled themselves into the fray with zeal, while some of the newer arrivals in the Marvel talent pool just sat and watched in amazement, as creators whose work they'd been reading for years locked horns over the best way to handle the return of the beloved characters.

Now, of course, the fans may not like what finally sees print. The story, whatever it turns out to be, may not satisfy everyone concerned.

Although, let's face it, what story has ever satisfied everyone?

It is the readers who ultimately decide whether they think a story works or not.

But for any of you who think the caretakers of the Marvel universe care any less about the characters than the fans do — well — I don't want to be so insensitive as to say you're wrong —

But you're definitely not right.

Sometimes you just stumble over something in a catalog and there is no question that you're going to pick up the phone immediately and order it.

Such was the case for me when, paging through Signals, "a catalog for fans and friends of public television," I stumbled over plush toys from Wallace & Gromit, the three delightful clay-animation British short films by Nick Parks.

There are five dolls in all: Wallace, the gently eccentric inventor; Gromit, his mute but infinitely wiser dog; Wendolene, Wallace's love interest who looks so much like Wallace, one wonders if incest will be the theme of the next short; Shaun, a sweater-wearing sheep; and, most hilariously, Feathers McGraw, the formidable outlaw penguin sporting his devilishly clever chicken disguise. They're nicely sized, averaging a foot tall each.

I'm a sucker for cute plush toys and for Wallace and Gromit, so this was a lethal combination for the old American Express card.

I don't usually plug merchandise, but for those interested in seeing the catalogue, you can write to Signals at P.O. Box 64428, Saint Paul, MN 55164. Or if you want to take my word for it that they look great, you can order them any time, day or night, by calling (800) 669-9696.

The stock numbers and prices are as follows: Wallace (54480), $29; Gromit (54481) $24; Wendolene (54482) $29; Shaun (54483) $24; Feathers McGraw (54484) $20. There are also sets of the videotapes, sweatshirts, and magnet sets.

For those poor, unfortunate devils who aren't enthusiasts of Wallace and Gromit, the foregoing was a colossal waste of time. To try and make it up to you — it's about time for — yes, that's right: another But I Digress contest!

I figure, Why not? Now that I have an assistant, Bashful Bernie, I can actually process winners and send out prizes in something less than a couple of years. So what are we doing for the contest this time?

Well, just to be really ambitious, it's going to be a two-parter.

What put me in mind of this was when, at that selfsame Marvel retreat, I was chatting with Kurt Busiek and Tom Brevoort and we were discussing team-ups that made Marvel vs. DC look tame.

Basically, we were coming up with historic meetings you'll never see between mainstream super-heroes and characters from the Harvey Comics line. These included: Henry Pym vs. Stumbo; Vision and Scarlet Witch vs. Casper and Wendy the Good Little Witch; The Ghostly Trio and the Warriors Three; Tony Stark and Richie Rich (with a separate team-up between Jarvis and Cadbury); and Sergeant Fury and Sad Sack.

And now I'm thinking, heck, let's really do it up. The first half of the contest involves coming up with battles that are between any two companies or universes except Marvel vs. DC, up to and including anything comics-related. That includes animation, comic strips, anything that's really appropriate (Martian Manhunter and Marvin the Martian vs. Mars Attacks).

But what took Marvel vs. DC to the next level was the Amalgam universe. So just to make it challenging, entries must also feature appropriately bizarre combos, as if characters or teams of characters or even characters and places had been merged.

None of this "Dark Claw" or "Super Soldier" stuff, though. The combos must have clearly identifiable names, and the weirder, the better. For example: Popeye the Sailor Moon; The Inferior Babylon 5; Pinky and The Brainiac.

Extra points will be given for entries accompanied by illustrations.

Entries should be addressed to: To Be Continued Inc., P.O. Box 239, Bayport, NY 11705, ATTN: Everybody vs. Everybody Contest.

All entries must be postmarked no later than March 12.

Good luck. You'll need it.

Peter David, writer of stuff, can be written to at ... Aw, hell, I just printed the address above. Go read it.

JUGGLING Multiple Titles

Brent Frankenhoff
CBG Associate Editor

When I was in college, I discovered the world of black-and-white comics, right at the height of the black-and-white glut. I enjoyed the adventures of Fred and Bianca in Aristocratic Xtra-Terrestrial Time-Traveling Thieves, laughed out loud at Mark Martin's Gnatrat stories, and found myself on the floor gasping for breath at the anti-social exploits of Reid Fleming, World's Toughest Milkman.

Creator David Boswell only produced five issues of the series between 1986 and 1990. The "Rogue to Riches" story-arc did conclude in issue #5, and that appeared to be the end of Reid's adventures.

Now, however, Deep Sea Comics has reprinted those issues and published a new issue of Reid Fleming. "Another Dawn" is set before the events of "Rogue to Riches" and is a wonderful return of the character and his supporting cast.

While Reid Fleming isn't for everyone, it is a lot of fun and really shows what a comedic writer with a great imagination can do. I especially enjoyed Reid's rooftop driving that opens the issue and the passages from the handbook for milk-delivery men that Reid's supervisor is forced to read when he fills in for the suspended Fleming. Funny stuff.

(Reid Fleming, World's Toughest Milkman, Deep Sea Comics, $2.95.)
